WHAT A SHAME

Wondering where Justine Sacco hid out after the misguided joke about AIDS she tweeted #broketheInternet (and cost her a job)? Or how Alicia Ann Lynch's life changed after pictures of her Boston Marathon bombing victim Halloween costume went viral? In his new book So You've Been Publicly Shamed, Jon Ronson uses such infamous transgressions to explore what public shaming means in the digital age—and to question whether lives should be ruined over one online blunder. Channel your inner Hester Prynne on April 2, when Ronson discusses and signs his book at the Brattle Theatre. / Meaghan Leahy

The IMPROPER On the Town!

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeck-Boston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England backyard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or...kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Mar-row Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call—a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. LOOKS LIKE WE MADE IT...

Mother Nature turned out to be such a bitch this winter that it's no surprise a glittering guest list turned out for the SAD Gala, held at the Four Seasons.

The evening, which raised money to battle Seasonal Affective Disorder, began with cocktails and a silent auction of all things tropical and beachy (a time share in Maui, a weekend on Nantucket), followed by a dinner of Caribbean delights. Present and accounted for: pharma bigwig Edward Garmey and the lovely Sophia, Channel 4 sizzler Lisa Hughes and her handsome husband, Mike Casey, Back Bay nabob Kier McDonough and his Scandinavian arm candy, Anja Kola, the drop-dead gorgeous Amber D'Amelio and her adoring other half, Michael, Red Sox slugger David Ortiz and the flawless Tiffany, and so on and so forth.

Instead of photo booths, guests were treated to spray tans, but the evening's highlight was undoubtedly the surprise appearance by Jon Bon Jovi, who performed an acoustic version of Pharrell's hit "Happy" that managed to snap even the most shell-shocked suburbanites out of their fugue state.

Statuesque beauty Alli Achtmeyer won the raffle prize—an ergonomically designed snow shovel—while the gift bags included a stress ball emblazoned with a smiley face and sample packets of Lexapro.

The evening's funniest remark: "Quite frankly, a witch's tit sounds warm to me at this point."

MOTHER'S LITTLE HELPER...

The line of black cars stretched down the block in front of the Park Plaza Castle at Ubers for the Underprivileged, a black-tie gala that attracted the likes of Wellesley socialites Ashley and Paul Bernon, sneaker heir Dan Fireman and the delicious Penny, cupcake queen Courtney Forrester and the dashing Michael, hostess extraordinaire Wendy Shattuck and her affable other half, Sam Plimpton, Tasmanian devil Joshua Janson, the gorgeous Joanna Humphrey Flynn and her main man, Bryan, Beacon Hillions Peter and Liz Georgantas, and one woman who asked the somewhat relevant question, "But do the underprivileged even have smartphones?"

Arcade games with prizes from luxury retailers such as Hermès and Chanel lined the room, and the open bar did brisk business, since no one was driving home.

It also provided the evening's wittiest remark: "Nannies are God's answer to hangovers."

MASS TRANSIT...

Taking matters into their own hands, a group of civic-minded Bostonians decided to raise funds for the foundering MBTA by throwing Tea for the T, an afternoon tea dance held at Club Cafe.

Front and center were His Nibs Charlie Baker, Hizzonah Marty Walsh, the Hat Sisters, several of the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence, snacky banker Rick Musiol, nonprofit guru Adrian Budhu, the inescapable Ricardo Rodriguez and his dreamy husband, Michael Kelley, with their heterosexual spouses, Jay Gordon and Alina Wolhardt-Gordon, blond bombshell April Soderstrom, male porn stars Cole and Hunter of Maverick Men, queen of the Silver Line Chantelle Marcial and one man who inexplicably decided to dress up as Thomas the Tank Engine.

The afternoon raised roughly $100,000, or, as one guest joked, "almost enough to buy a Charlie card."

TO SPANK OR NOT TO SPANK...

Broadway came to Boston for the opening night of Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's production of Fifty Shades of Grey, the Musical!

The evening began with drinks and dinner at the Cyclorama, which was decorated to look like an S&M dungeon, and continued with the performance at the Calderwood Pavilion, where Tony Award winner Billy Porter joined in the rousing production number "Billionaires Are Da Bomb in Bed."

Seen dabbing their eyes in the audience: company head Steve Maler, Babson grand poobah Kerry Healey, Back Bay doyenne Smoki Bacon, former governor Michael Dukakis and the lovely Kitty, and one woman who said, "I'm thinking of redecorating. Maybe I should do a Red Room of Pain."

Oh, and by the way...April Fool's! ◆

BIG HITTERS

LAST YEAR'S MIDSEASON FIRE SALE left even die-hard fans less than thrilled with the 2014 version of the Red Sox, but there are plenty of good reasons to root for the home team this season. High on that list: third baseman Pablo Sandoval. Scott Lauber finds out what brought the two-time All-Star from San Francisco to Boston in this issue's cover story. Meanwhile, Ezra Dyer takes a closer look at the rest of the retooled lineup, assessing the team's odds of going from worst to first again. Spoiler alert: He thinks they're pretty darn good.

Turning from the Sox to shoes, Matt Martinelli chats with the local designers of some new sneakers, while Alexandra Cavallo checks in with a recently launched startup bringing haute heels from Italy to Boston. And Jonathan Soroff interviews local best-selling author Jeff Kinney, just in time for April's "Wimpy Kid" month and the opening of his new bookstore. Elsewhere, I tap a new nanobrewery, while Sarah Hagman sips an appropriately named cocktail: the Green Monster. Whether you prefer to enjoy the liquid version or the real thing at Fenway, I hope you have a great start to the season.

TOM GORE
VINEYARDS

Tom Gore: A Farmers Story

v did you become a Vineyard Manager?

me, farming is a way of life. I was born into a family of e farmers, so I spent my childhood among the vines and yard workers.

en did you know that you wanted to spend your farming the vineyards?

arly as age 7, when I was following my father and uncle nd the vineyards. I really never envisioned doing anything else.

What led to your decision to grow grapes for your own wine label?

I'm of the school that winemaking begins in the vineyard. We're the stewards of the land and the care we take growing the grapes really begins the journey of the wine. Tom Gore Vineyards allows me to tell this story.

Tom Gore Wines COMING TO BOSTON

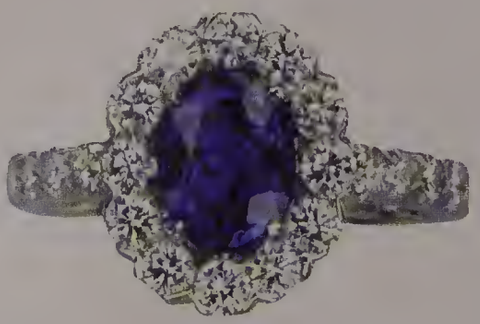
What is your favorite part of this new adventure so far?

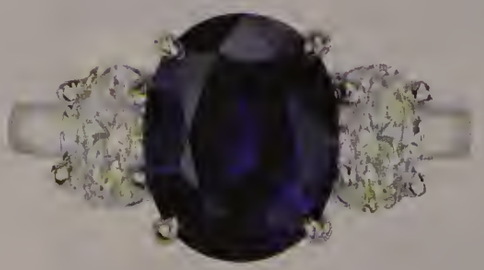
Since I usually work behind the scenes, Tom Gore Vineyards is a new and exciting experience for me. It allows me to share my expertise as a grape farmer with wine enthusiasts, showing how the work in the field shapes the wine's character in the glass. Look at it this way: A chef needs outstanding ingredients to make outstanding dishes. And a winemaker needs high-quality grapes to make great wine.

What do you want to share with wine lovers?



I see the wines as time capsules, expressions of that particular growing season. With every bottle of Tom Gore Vineyards, we share that connection to the earth with our wine drinkers.

"Farming is my life's work and my greatest joy. As long as I'm outside, with my dogs, and enjoying the earth, I'm happy."



Please enjoy our wines responsibly.

A LOCAL STARTUP PUTS ITS BEST FOOT FORWARD.

SHOE FETISH: Visit mgemi.com to check out all the current offerings. »

If the Shoe Fits

"SHOES TRANSFORM YOUR body language and attitude. They lift you physically and emotionally." So sayeth Christian Louboutin, the creator of the iconic red-bottomed heels for which many women will gladly hand over a full month's rent.

Ben Fischman, founder of the new Boston startup M. Gemi, wholly agrees with the sentiment—but he doesn't believe that women should have to break the bank to own a beautiful, well-made shoe. So he traveled to Italy to find another way.

"The woman who buys shoes knows that the finest shoes in the world are made in Italy," Fischman says. "But there's been this really interesting thing that's taken place over the last 25 years. If today a woman wants to buy a pair of beautiful, gorgeous, high-quality Italian shoes in the U.S., she's going to have to spend, on average, between $500 and $2,000."

That's where M. Gemi comes in. Launched late last month, the company aims to deliver finely crafted Italian shoes to American shoppers at an attainable price point. "Our thesis, and I think a thesis that is probably shared amongst the consumer, is why does luxury have to be super expensive?" Fischman says.

It's a familiar question for the serial entrepreneur, who founded the flash-sale site Rue La La and served as its CEO until 2013. But now he's moving into manufacturing, partnering directly with small factories in Florence to produce shoes—from snakeskin boat shoes to suede wedges to sleek stilettos—that range from $98 to $398.

"These are facilities that have been passed down from generation to generation," Fischman says. "These are craftsmen, sitting in shops, sitting on stools, sitting around tables, sitting with limited machinery and handcrafting these gorgeous pieces of art."

As such, the craftsmen will only produce a limited number of each style. A new collection is released every Monday at 10 am, and no style is available for more than 12 weeks—though Fischman hopes most will sell out well before then.

"In many ways, this is a reinvention of luxury," he says. "When people can grab onto craftsmanship again and grab onto some level of individuality, I think they respond incredibly well." / Alexandra Cavallo

Small-Batch Style

Fischman is particularly excited about one upcoming style: a collection of driving moccasins handmade by a woman in Tuscany. "She can only make six to eight pairs a day," he says. "We don't want to increase her capacity. We love the notion of this really limited availability." Those mocs won't be released for a few weeks, but M. Gemi has plenty of other styles on offer in the meantime. We pulled a few of our favorites.

WINE AND DINE

MOODY'S DELICATESSEN UNCORKS A NEW BACKROOM CONCEPT.

The Backroom
468 Moody St., Waltham
(781-216-8732)
moodyswolthom.com

CHARCUTERIE WILL ALWAYS BE THE FIRST love for Moody's Delicatessen owner Joshua Smith. He started obsessing over the meats when he was a 19-year-old working at Dean & Deluca's.

"I was like, 'I'm going to do this,'" he says. "Most people laughed and they said, 'Well, nobody does this. It's a dying art.' And I was hell-bent on doing it."

But now that he's opening the Backroom, a dinner spot slated to debut April 8 in the back of Moody's fawned-over Waltham shop, the spotlight will be on his new love: wine.

While he was working at the Four Seasons, Smith started making charcuterie for a tasting room at the Seghesio Family Vineyards in Sonoma. When he stocked them up every three months, he'd get a hands-on experience at the vineyards. Now, he's making his own wine with a friend in Sonoma.

"We're obsessed with wine and exploring it. So we thought a natural progression would be to create a backroom," Smith says. "It's a place where you can come and get a charcuterie board, and taste your way through as many wines as charcuterie."

There will be more than 60 bottles of wine, mostly from California and France, with nearly half available by the glass, including 20 reds that are dotted with selections such as Screaming Eagle. That high-end pick routinely sells on the secondary market for more than $1,000 a bottle, but the Backroom will offer it by the glass thanks to the Coravin tool, which inserts a hollow needle through the cork so you can preserve freshness as you pour. An Enomatic dispenser will also help with wine preservation. But one of Smith's best ways to keep the wine fresh is an old trick: "We're going to have untraditional markups. We want to move wine; we want people to taste wine. We don't want to make it unapproachable."

But don't be fooled by all the wine talk. The Backroom will still be a destination for charcuterie lovers. Smith plans to use different varieties in dishes such as a spicy 'nduja and ricotta flatbread and a homemade pasta program that will often allow Smith to pair pastas with various meats. Elsewhere on the menu, he'll use a rotisserie to cook a slow-smoked chicken with vegetables and garlic confit, and he's tapping a small Wayland farm for 17th-century-style flint corn that can be fried up for a bar snack or a side of grits.

With 33 table seats and 16 at the bar, Smith describes the Backroom as a "one-off" spurred on by Moody's success. So don't expect it to become a franchise—or even have a sequel. But he does have a Disney-like approach to one aspect of the business.

"The deli will stay open with the restaurant, so if guests come in and enjoy a sausage or salami, they'll be able to purchase that after their dinner," he says. "Walt Disney figured that out. As soon as they're done with the ride, it ends in the gift shop. You have to go through the retail shop to get here."

ROYAL TREATMENT

FREESTYLING: Rachid Kourda mans the kitchen at Royal.

FROM LAMB OF THE DAY TO DEEP-FRIED Oreos, the food at the recently opened Royal in Watertown reflects chef/owner Rachid Kourda's melting-pot background as a Tunisian-born, French-trained, experienced-in-America entrepreneur. Like any good entrepreneur, he's already adjusting to market forces by no longer opening for breakfast on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, and by working toward obtaining a liquor license.

Located just outside Watertown Square on Lexington Street, Royal is Kourda's first restaurant. Serving everything from weekend brunch to lunch and dinner, he's happily ensconced in what he calls his "freestyle kitchen."

"I do not do classic dishes," he says, adding that he enjoys incorporating whatever ingredient is on trend and featuring daily specials at each meal. Recent specials have included osso bucco pork shank "with a very silky potato purée," tuna with lime chimichurri, lamb kofta with harissa aioli and, at lunch, duck confit on challah bread.

As for those Oreos, which are served gratis to children, he explains: "I batter them with house-made tempura batter, and I top them with candied cashews, vanilla ice cream and bananas.... Sometimes I put white chocolate on top of it."

SWEET IDEA...

OUT IN NEEDHAM, SWEET BASIL CHEF/OWNER Dave Becker is cooking up yet another project. Spoon + Fork, his new "umbrella corporation," is licensing and packaging products from Sweet Basil (and Wellesley sister restaurant Juniper) for retail sale. With a giant extruder producing 35 pounds of pasta per hour in Sweet Basil's basement, Becker says going retail was the only sensible thing to do. So far, you can buy pesto and pastas "handmade in Needham" at Moody's in Waltham and Wasik's Cheese Shop in Wellesley. Soon, he'll add an "old school-style refrigerator" at Juniper to display all the Middle Eastern-style dips as well.

Drink of the Moment
THE GREEN MONSTER

GREEN MILEAGE: Serafina's new gin cocktail offers a refreshing sip.

PRICE: $11

INGREDIENTS: Bombay gin, Maraschino liqueur, lime juice, muddled cucumber, basil

TASTE: Refreshing. "The Maraschino liqueur softens up whatever flavor you put it with," explains Roberto Porsia, Serafina's general manager. "So even if you're not a big gin drinker, you're going to like it."

PAIR IT WITH: Tartare di Sofia, served atop cucumber slices ($16).

CONTEXT: Serafina's first New England outpost serves up Italian staples—like Bellinis and Negronis—as well as some novelties not found on the New York-based restaurant group's other menus, including a spicy cucumber drink with vodka and jalapeno and a Pimm's cocktail featuring Domain de Canton and ginger beer. "My drink program is completely not reinventing the wheel. I'm old-school Italian. I grew up in Italy; I have an Italian restaurant," says Porsia, who also spent time at the Ames Hotel, Rialto and, most recently, Bastille Kitchen. "I like simple things: beer, wine and basic cocktails. There's no reason to wait 10 minutes for a cocktail and use ingredients you can't even pronounce, and shake and burn and light things on fire. Our cocktails are very simple; they're friendly, approachable."

The recent cosmetic updates at Union Square's beloved Independent are relatively minor, but the menu got a thorough makeover—especially in the case of the fried chicken. Under the guidance of consulting chef Patrick Gilmartin, from sibling restaurant River Bar and the bygone Staff Meal food truck, the classic Southern fry plate took a turn toward Nashville and picked up some heat. Now the craggy, crunchy pieces get a light brush of cayenne-spiked hot-sweet sauce and pickled jalapeno rings, which you can relish or relieve with sides of coleslaw and cornbread. / Elizabeth Bomze

Soles with Soul

Memo to marathoners: If you spot someone wearing New Balance's Fresh Foam Zante sneaker, you might want to let your fellow runner pass so you can check out the kicks. The limited-edition Boston version of the shoe ($115) sports an image of the city skyline on the insole, "Boston" stenciled into the iconic "N" and a motivating message, "FASTAH," on the sole. The team of designers—all runners themselves—hoped to link their love of running to a love for the city where New Balance was founded. "There are small discovery elements that tie back to our favorite city," says New Balance senior product manager Claire Wood. "And the message on the outsole was inspiration for anyone who runs, and whatever their 'fastah' is." / Matt Martinelli

DO YOU HAVE ANY PLANS FOR WHEN YOU'RE BACK IN BOSTON? I love Brigham's, but they're disappearing, so that makes me sad. Now there's like no Brigham's left anywhere; it's like a Bruce Springsteen song.... Whenever I go back to Boston, I'm back out in the suburbs to see all my friends. We go to the suburban locations, random Chinese restaurants and stuff.

WHICH CHARACTER HAS BEEN YOUR FAVORITE TO PLAY? Well, probably my favorite was my first Debbie Downer at Disney World, where we all started laughing.

YOU LOOK LIKE YOU'RE IN PAIN TRYING TO KEEP IT TOGETHER. I know! Well, you try not to laugh because you know it's kind of a cheap trick. Like the audience eats it up when you laugh, so I would really try not to. Sometimes when you started laughing, you could usually sort of hide your face down or be behind somebody or at least try to disguise it. But in that one, I knew the camera was coming at me every single time, so there was nowhere to run. So it added an extra level of panic.

WHAT'S THE BEST PART OF INTERACTING WITH COMEDIANS DURING IMPROV, AS OPPOSED TO DURING A SCRIPTED SCENE? I guess it's just kind of a different part of your brain. Speaking of science, I actually just read in an article like two days ago that the part of your brain responsible for improv is a whole different part of your brain that would be responsible for writing a script or writing a funny comedy scene. So I think I definitely have a better improv brain than a sketch-writing brain, but it's just a little more freeing. You have to be in the moment; you have to listen to your teammates, or improv-mates—fellow performers, I guess I should say. When you're in the zone, it's kind of this very free feeling.

WORLDS APART, TOGETHER

A FIRST NOVEL GOES UPSTAIRS AND DOWN IN 1940S AND '50S BOSTON.

The Red Coat* by Dolley Carlson
Published by Lettermullen Press, 480 pages, $17

BRAHMIN EMPLOYERS AND THEIR immigrant servants are connected by this book's title garment. The patrician Mrs. Parker gives her daughter's coat to her scrub-woman, Norah. Norah's big Irish family is portrayed as full of boisterous energy, but also lace-curtain-seeking propriety, an almost childlike devotion to the Catholic Church and a closeness heightened by her husband's drinking. Their distance from the parallel world of the worthy but chillier Beacon Hill family is starkly conveyed through language, possessions and everyday family interactions.

But Norah's children rise in the world. One marries across social lines and enters the class whose floors her mother washed. Another ascends from the projects to home ownership and sees her policeman husband promoted to detective. Still, a shotgun wedding and an abortion receive Old World shaming.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Parker's daughter Cordelia works in a fancy linen shop, where she fatefully reconnects with her long-lost red coat. Her life on Mt. Vernon Street is a lonely one—until her tenant, a Jewish dentist, falls for her, sparking a relationship that requires unexpected accommodations. But like her former servants, she embraces change. Carlson, herself a third-generation Irish American whose father served in the BPD, colorfully paints these different but connected worlds, rich in Boston details.

FROM PAGE 53: "The lady of that grand house on Beacon Hill gave you this coat.... Her name is Mrs. Caroline Parker, and I'm sure you'll want to be askin' our Lord to give her a blessin' or two for the kindness of it all."

Rosemary took the coat in her hands, twirled, and placed it gently on a nearby chair, as if it were a child sitting alone for the first time. ◆

PARADISUS FOUND

ALL-INCLUSIVE TAKES ON A NEW MEANING AT A RECENTLY REVAMPED RESORT.

IN THE WORLD OF TRAVEL, FEW PHRASES COME as loaded with unintended meaning as "all-inclusive resort." Hoteliers hope you'll hear it and envision a poolside paradise where the bronzed and gorgeous indulge in gourmet dining and constantly flowing cocktails. What you actually imagine: a cast of cheesy Hawaiian shirt models saddled up to a buffet, slipping bagels in their fanny packs ("in case I need a snack") and slurping down vaguely alcoholic sugar-water.

"These are not my kin," you sniff with the indignation typically reserved for those distant high school classmates who send Facebook invites to play Candy Crush. "Who do you take me for?"

Pause, please, and consider the case of Paradisus Palma Real, a fanny pack-free zone in the Dominican Republic's sun-smothered Punta Cana that strives to show the "all-inclusive" experience in a more luxurious light. The property sprawls like a tropical Versailles across Bavaro Beach and greets guests with a sunken courtyard with towering arches, from which marble- and stucco-lined paths snake their way around the brilliant 37,600-square-foot swimming pool (the largest in Punta Cana), amid tropical gardens, through open-air cocktail lounges and toward white sands dotted with big thatched umbrellas and day beds. Want a casino? A theater with nightly shows? Free golfing at a nearby country club? Check, check, check.

Well-trod all-inclusive resorts tend to chip, peel and show their age, like cheap flip-flops that got tossed in the wash after you hurriedly unpacked. Paradisus Palma Real feels crisp and new, because a large chunk of it is. A $12 million winter renovation has just added 42 luxury suites associated with the resort's new Family Concierge service. Despite the name, and although it does offer a few relevant amenities (like adorable mini-me bathrobes that set your biological clock to "aww!" mode), no rugrat or proof of marital status is required to book the Family Concierge service. It's simply the most tricked-out in a tiered (and slightly confusing) approach to all-inclusive packages, encompassing the elements of the standard and Royal levels of service (like a "walkie-talkie" for calling your own personal butler) while adding access to exclusive spaces—like a private check-in lounge, restaurant, pool and beach area. Plus, you get the sleek new suites with ocean views and Jacuzzi-equipped balconies, draped in sheer linens and the soothing color palette of light coffee. Yes, even you, childless, youngish urbanite.

On that note, it merits mentioning that this isn't the kind of sleepy all-inclusive geared toward the AARP set. When you're not out on the water—kayaking, windsurfing, on board a sunset cruise or snorkeling excursion—you might find your tanning time accompanied by EDM beats dropped at Gabi Beach, a new oceanfront lounge where 30-something Financial District denizens on vacay bop to Rihanna remixes well into the night. In their hands are drinks devised by the bearded, suspender-clad Miguel Lancha, a booze guru of note (particularly in his native Spain) who oversees Palma Real's beverage program and offers the kind of metropolitan mixology that's unusual in Caribbean resorts. Palma Real boasts nearly 20 bars and restaurants in total, and other spots that shatter your bad-buffet stereotypes include Rare, a newly opened modern steakhouse for juicy cuts and red wine, and the four diamond-awarded Passion, Michelin-starred Spanish chef Martin Berasategui's rosebud-covered refuge that emphasizes tasting menus. Passion dining does fall outside the all-inclusive packages, but it's worth the extra bucks.

Also deserving of a few extra dollars are body treatments at Palma Real's two Yhi Spa locations. A tidy menu of Eastern-inspired services is available at the smaller of the spas, a series of slatted wood bungalows that dot the pond of an "oriental garden" like lily pads. The second, larger Yhi, a sandalwood-scented compound of massage rooms, saunas and hydrotherapy baths, is located at The Reserve at Palma Real, a neighboring concept that is billed as a "boutique resort" within the larger resort: a scaled-down, more sedate version that lacks the nightlife buzz and immediate beach access, but feels more forested, secluded and romantic.

Wholly separate, but also worth considering, is sibling property Paradisus Punta Cana, a 15-minute drive from Palma Real. The beachside Paradisus Punta Cana is likewise all-inclusive, with five pools and facilities that mirror many of those found at the Palma Real: It has its own Yhi spa, its own Passion restaurant (among 11 others) and its own Reserve spinoff. But there's an even higher-end sheen here, a stronger sense of privacy, less subwoofer thumping and more teeming tropical gardens for exploring on loaner bikes dispensed from scattered Hubway-style racks. Confused yet? Let us break it down: Think Paradisus Palma Real now, Paradisus Punta Cana two marriages and a stronger stock portfolio later. But please, even then, leave the fanny pack at home. ◆

THE MIÀN THING

MDM NOODLES SHOWCASES THE HEARTY WONDERS OF HENAN CUISINE.

MDM Noodles
351 Washington St., Boston (617-208-8663)
mdmnoodle.com

THE SECOND DECADE OF THE 21ST CENTURY is a great time to be a Chinese-loving food geek in Boston. Fans of the regional cuisines of Guangzhou, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Sichuan, Shandong and Shanghai have been well-served, but other regions had gotten short shrift. That started to change when downtown- and Woburn-based Gene's Chinese Flatbread introduced locals to Shaanxi cuisine, while Chef Chang's on Back Bay debuted with some Shaanxi and Uighur dishes. Now comes Brighton Center's MDM Noodles, a modest 40-seat storefront focusing on central China's Henan province. Open a few weeks, MDM is already drawing throngs, mainly Chinese ex-pats and the usual plucky Chowhound types, but there's more behind this stampede than mere novelty.

Guests enter to encounter a glass buffet case with an eye-catching assortment of ingredients: raw meats and seafood, Chinese sausages, vegetables, seaweed and mushrooms, gnarly slips of wheat gluten, tofu skin and puffs. Order the currently trendy mala soup ($5 vegetarian, $7 with meat or seafood)—think Chinese hot pot with noodles and spicy broth, only prepared in the kitchen, not tableside—and this case is where you'll build your bowl. As the term mala indicates, the broth combines the fire of capsicum chilies with the mentholated, numbing "heat" of Sichuan peppercorns. Mala pot ($10/pound for meat and seafood, $8/basket for vegetables) offers a brothless version of the soup topped with cilantro and sesame seeds and served with a side of excellent rice. I chose beef, salami-like Chinese sausage, potato, lotus root, gluten, tree-ear fungus and cabbage for a fresh, light, mildly numbing-hot stir-fry. (I suspect my paleo-faddist friends would love this menu section, too.)

But the heart of MDM lies in Henan province, home of the two chefs, as well as the neighboring Shaanxi, Chongqing and further-flung Xinjiang provinces. Wheat, the staple grain of these temperate regions, is rendered into a variety of noodles and flatbreads. Lamb is the predominant protein. Dried cumin (a Chinese Muslim import), garlic, chilies and Sichuan peppercorns are everywhere. Caddy condiments include chili oil, sugar, finely ground white pepper and black vinegar for amplifying and tweaking flavors to diners' individual preferences. For starters, BBQ lamb kabob ($1.50) is irresistible: skewered little chunks of juicy grilled lamb with a fiercely fragrant dusting of cumin and dried chili. Spicy cumin lamb burger ($4.75) is a sandwich of rugged flatbread (like a tougher English muffin) filled with garlicky, lightly fiery, tenderly braised lamb.

Miàn Duì Miàn means "Noodles on Noodles," and where MDM truly shines is its namesake, especially its hand-pulled noodle, which recalls a long strand of narrow, curly-edged lasagna with a denser, chewier texture. A two-foot coil of this uniquely hearty noodle underpins the spicy boiled lamb hand-pulled noodle ($9). Easier to eat if you bite through it in spots, it's topped with slices of lamb, an insistently garlicky and numbing-hot sauce, shredded carrots, mung bean sprouts and cilantro. Vegetarians can enjoy the similar but meatless spicy hot-oil hand-pulled noodle ($6.50). Hand-pulled noodle also bulks up the astonishing house specialty of lamb meat soup ($9.50), which has three superb accents: a silky, milky, lamb-bone/marrow broth; cubes of lamb leg with the old-fashioned, richly gamy flavor of mutton; and quail eggs with miraculously creamy yolks. And hand-pulled noodle provides the foundation of the gorgeous, substantial Xinjiang chicken ($20 for two, $35 for four, $50 for six), a piquant stew of bone-in chicken, potatoes, sweet peppers, aromatics and mala heat.

There are other types of noodles, like the potato-starch ones (akin to slippery, translucent linguine) that pop up in Sichang spicy noodle soup ($7), which balances mala heat with the pucker-inducing tang of Chinese vinegar; bok choy, ground pork and spongy fried tofu cubes add textural and savory interest. Buckwheat cold noodle ($6.50) is a rare disappointment, reading as ordinary wheat noodles with no discernible buckwheat character. Liang pi ("cold skin") noodle ($5.50) is far more successful, a fabulous cold-noodle dish with the intriguing, delicate texture of white "noodles" made from starch extracted from wheat dough, topped with sprouts, spongy gluten cubes, cilantro and a dressing vividly combining soy sauce, chili oil and black vinegar. (Given its labor intensiveness and short shelf life, this dish frequently sells out.)

MDM noodle soup ($7) sets skinny rice noodles in a mild broth with bok choy, gluten cubes, cilantro and quail eggs. Wonton soup ($6.50), a nod to owner Sam Ho's family roots in Hong Kong, boasts perfect, delicate pork-filled wontons in a fine golden broth. Beverage options are limited to bottled soft drinks ($2-$3) and complimentary hot tea. Service admirably keeps pace with the mobs already common at peak dining hours, though their English skills are variable; point clearly to your menu and buffet-case items to avoid confusion. Speaking of possible crossed signals, the phrase "May you live in interesting times" is frequently (and entirely apocryphally) cited by English speakers as a Chinese curse. After a few meals slurping and chomping your way down MDM Noodles' fascinating regional byways, you may want to reinterpret that alleged imprecation as the blessing it really is. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: I LOVE MY BOYFRIEND, BUT HE HAS A VERY HAIRY BACK THAT MAKES HIM SELF-CONSCIOUS. DO MANY MEN DO LASER HAIR REMOVAL?

A: Absolutely! Back, shoulder and chest hair can be embarrassing for some men. Many men like their furry look, but an equal number don't. We have performed laser hair removal for hundreds of men. The new norm is a sleek, hair-free look; the better to show off those muscles!

Laser hair removal works by using light-based energy to permanently disable the hair follicle so it cannot product new hairs. The laser light selectively targets hair follicles while leaving other tissue untouched. Several treatments are required to remove all the hair, but a significant reduction is attained after each session.

Other treatment areas that are popular with men for laser hair removal include the ears, the chest, and the neck it can be a wonderful treatment for men who suffer from painful and annoying ingrown hairs.

As with other laser procedures, make certain to select an experienced professional for optimal results.

WHILE WE'RE YOUNG ★★★

Movies / Brett Michel

WASTED ON THE YOUNG

YOUTH DOESN'T QUITE SPRING ETERNAL IN NOAH BAUMBACH'S LATEST.

Noah Baumbach's eighth film as a writer/director opens with some pointed onscreen quotes from Henrik Ibsen's The Master Builder, establishing the animosity those in middle age exhibit toward the younger generation. The fact that Ibsen's observations were first published in 1892 only underlines that the conceit of While We're Young has long been—and will always be—raging.

Cut to a newborn's face as documentary filmmaker Josh (Ben Stiller, star of Baumbach's acerbic 2010 film Greenberg) and his wife/producer Cornelia (Naomi Watts) demonstrate their lack of parenting skills by freely using the word "fuck," fumbling with the baby as a music-box rendition of David Bowie's "Golden Years" plays on the soundtrack. Ah, but this baby isn't theirs. A childless couple in their mid-40s, they're visiting their best friends, new parents Fletcher (Adam Horovitz, aka "Ad-Rock," erstwhile member of the Beastie Boys) and Marina (Maria Dizzia). But they're soon relegated to supporting roles as Josh and Cordelia open their door to a young hipster couple, nascent documentarian Jamie (Adam Driver, from Baumbach's last film, 2012's Frances Ha) and ice cream maker Darby (Amanda Seyfried), who crash Josh's continuing-education class.

Josh, who's spent nearly a decade working on a film that he's nevertheless unable to describe, is thrilled that someone is showing an interest in his obscure work. Soon, he's taking up an invitation to visit Jamie and Darby's bohemian loft with Cornelia, despite her initial protests.

"We don't even see our real friends—why do you want to spend time with a couple of 25-year-olds?" she asks. But once Cornelia unwittingly joins flagging best friend Marina at a mommy's group, she finds herself child-deep in the movie's biggest moment of sheer, hyperventilating horror. Fleeing the guitar-led sing-along, Cornelia meets up with Darby, who brings her to a "hip-hop class"—a sequence that taps into Watts' underutilized inner comedian as she awkwardly flails about, more uncoordinated than the babies she just escaped.

Spirits aren't just lifted in While We're Young; they're also violently expelled.

Meanwhile, Stiller thankfully underplays his typically outsized comic persona as Josh takes Jamie under his wing. Re-energized, he begins to act more and more like his young protege, affectedly wearing a thin-rimmed hat and riding a bike—and painfully peddling his way toward a diagnosis of arthritic knees.

While Josh and Cornelia enjoy their flirtation with youthful reminders of a more hopeful past, Baumbach employs a montage that cross-cuts the couple indulging in their modern electronic conveniences—iPhones, iPads, cable TV—while Jamie and Darby stick with discoveries from an earlier time, such as paper, typewriters (electric, but still) and vinyl records.

Marveling at the thousands of albums lining the walls of Jamie and Darby's apartment, Josh notes, "This is just like my record collection...except mine are CDs."

Subtly humorous, naturalistic lines like that are what lift Baumbach's best pictures past many of his contemporaries'. It's when he gets bogged down in plot machinations that his movies can sometimes suffer—and there's a surfeit of plot here compared to, say, Frances Ha, in which Greta Gerwig dashes through Manhattan as Bowie's "Modern Love" backs her sprint and lifts your spirits.

Spirits aren't just lifted in While We're Young; they're also violently expelled. Drifting further away from their aging Generation X contemporaries, Josh and Cornelia turn down a cookout invitation in order to join their new millennial friends at a weekend-long ayahuasca ceremony. "Puke out your demons," says the hippie shaman (Baumbach regular Dean Wareham of the band Luna), who tries just a bit too hard to set a New Age mood by playing Vangelis' "Love Theme from Blade Runner" from his iPod as buckets overflow with vomit.

Soon after, Jamie strikes upon an idea for a documentary of his own. Josh finds the concept thin, but he's flattered by Jamie's offer to have him co-direct. "This generation is so generous!" he proclaims, even after he's just picked up Jamie's lunch tab. Again.

Later, feelings get hurt when Josh and Cornelia drop in unannounced on their old friends, only to discover a large party filled with 40-somethings that they weren't invited to. "You're an old man with a hat," Fletcher tells Josh, whose ego takes more hits in a problematic third act as Cornelia's father, Leslie (a white-haired Charles Grodin, rounding out an impeccable cast), an elder statesman of the documentary scene's cinema verite era, offers to look at Josh's sprawling work-in-progress.

Duplicities pile up, as do resentments, but this film—and Josh—aren't Greenberg. The honesty can still be bitter at times, but there's a newfound sweetness that's crept into Baumbach's last two pictures. With the passage of time comes the realization that the cruelty of life doesn't have to sting so hard when tempered with the love of a partner. That, and a good bottle of Scotch to share. ◆

HURRAY FOR THE RIFF RAFF plays the Paradise Rock Club on April 23.

ROOTS ACTION

A RESTLESS TROUBADOUR FINDS HER PLACE IN SOCIO-POLITICAL AMERICANA

WOMEN USUALLY GET TARGETED IN murder ballads, the traditional form that echoes in songs like the Johnny Cash-popularized "Delia's Gone" and Neil Young's "Down by the River." Hurray for the Riff Raff songwriter Alynda Lee Segarra counts herself as a fan of Cash and Young, but in her Americana band's "The Body Electric," she sings, "Well, Delia's gone, but I'm settling the score."

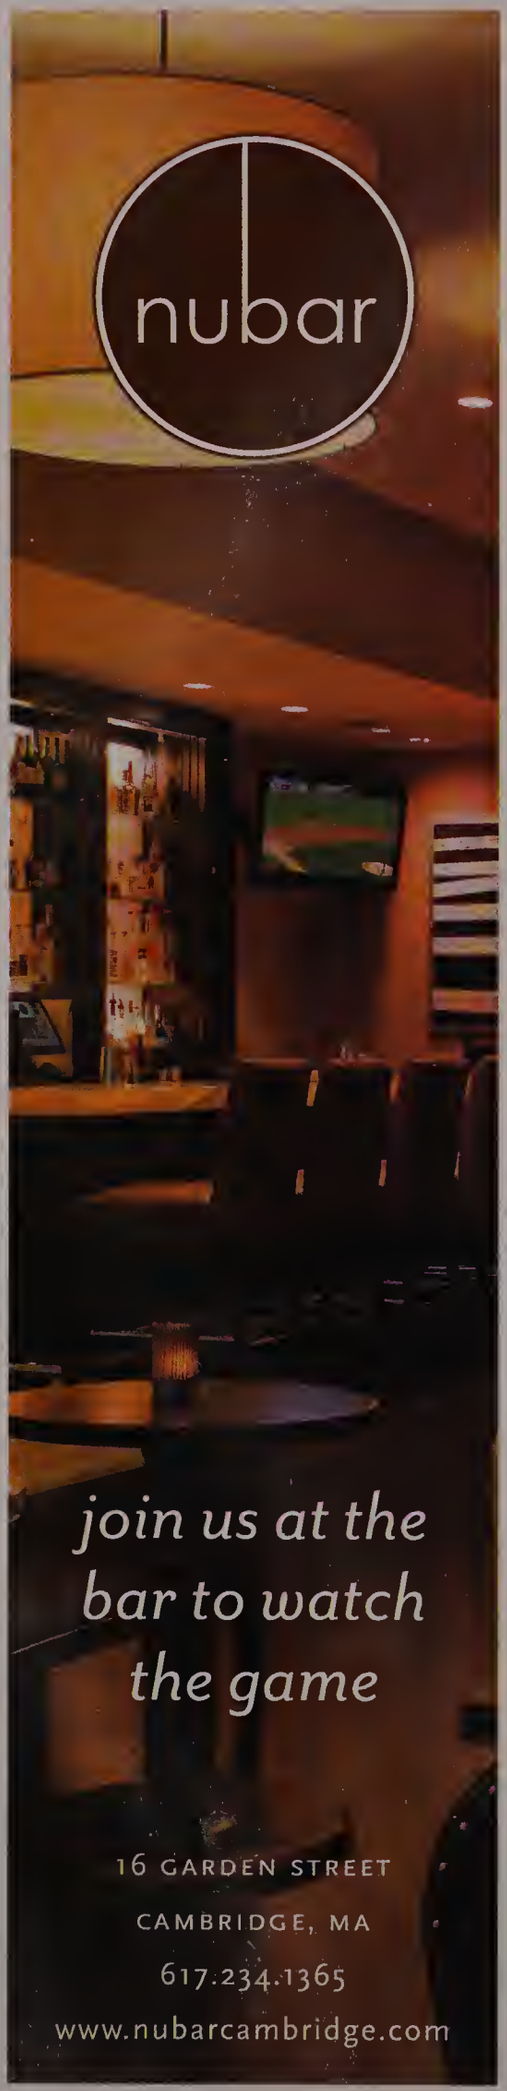
"A lot of those songs were just historical accounts, but I also felt like I saw this theme that's still going on today," Segarra says of gender-based violence. "I felt we really need to redirect it. I wanted to go back and give voices to those female characters. I wanted to go back and sing for them and say, 'I want to come and find you and take you out of the well or out of the river,' because I just thought it was time that somebody did."

The centerpiece of Hurray for the Riff Raff's acclaimed 2014 album Small Town Heroes, "The Body Electric" also graces a free NoiseTrade sampler that includes a previously unreleased acoustic song for Trayvon Martin. And the group funded an impressionistic video for "The Body Electric" through an Indiegogo campaign that raised additional money for both the Trayvon Martin Foundation and the Third Wave Fund, which supports gender justice for LBGT youth.

"We're just trying to bring these intersections together and say, 'This is where we live,'" Segarra says. She calls herself "complicated" as a Puerto Rican woman who identifies as queer but not gay, while longtime Hurray for the Riff Raff fiddler Yosi Perlstein is transgender. "Queer is the term that really talks about how gender and sexuality are on a spectrum, and it's different for everyone," says Segarra, 28.

Her socio-political grounding began as a teenager, when the Bronx native hit the Lower East Side to catch feminist punk shows. She moved on to poetry slams at the Nuyorican Poets Cafe. "All these Puerto Ricans reading their poems, it really affected me and made me feel like, 'Wow, these are my roots.'" But at age 17, Segarra left home to wander the country, hopping freight trains and finding a new community of itinerant youths who shared instruments. Before that, she says, "I didn't think I had it in me to play music." When she finally settled in New Orleans, busking provided an actual income, and her music evolved into the buoyant and lilting folk, blues and doo-wop of Hurray for the Riff Raff.

"When I was traveling around, living on the road, I always had that drive, [saying] 'I'm going to make something of myself...'"



"Those early years were so scattered and, in a way, really hard. And now I feel like I finally have this purpose and all that hard work is paying off," Segarra says from the road in Oregon, winding toward an April 23 show at the Paradise Rock Club. "Sometimes people ask me, 'Do you miss playing on the street?' And I say, 'Well, no, 'cause I like microphones and it's a lot more soothing for my voice.'"

That voice captivates on the gentle lament "St. Roch Blues" against the contrast of lyrics like "You don't know the things that I've seen! Them bullets are flying." Segarra witnessed the trauma of post-Katrina New Orleans, confirming she saw one boy shot across the street from where she lived. "It felt really good to get all that out on Small Town Heroes," she says. "Even though I was a street kid, I was still not experiencing what the people who are from there experienced.... Through so much of the violence that I saw in New Orleans, I always kept that in mind. I was like, 'These kids really don't feel like they have a future.'"

That wasn't the case for her in New York. Though she lived with an aunt, Segarra says she respected her Vietnam War veteran father and her mother, a deputy mayor for Rudolph Giuliani. "She grew up not having a lot and really made something of herself," Segarra says. "When I was traveling around, living on the road, I always had that drive, [saying] 'I'm going to make something of myself. I'm going to prove to everyone that there's something in me.'" ◆

SHRED DREAD

WHEN DID SKIING BECOME SUCH A COMPLICATED PASTIME?

I AM NOT MUCH OF A SKIER. I WAS RAISED BY hippies who disdained the pastimes of the patriarchal elite, so the only skis we owned were the cross-country variety, otherwise known as torture sticks. You'd haltingly lurch out into the forest and spend an hour herringboning up a hill, only to zip back down in 23 seconds. Cross-country skis are to skiing what O'Doul's is to beer, or kale is to food. Once I got to college I embraced downhill skiing—mainly the après part of it.

Skiing, for me, is an excuse to sit outside wearing snow pants and drinking beer—an activity that will be viable this year roughly until the beginning of the Patriots preseason. But I just got back from a trip to Colorado, where I discovered that three factors have conspired to spoil my lackadaisical approach: ticket prices, GoPros and phone apps.

First, the money: No matter where you ski, it's gotten expensive. And I was at Vail, where a day's lift ticket ran about $140. When you're spending $140, there's an incentive to actually ski more than two runs before retiring to the lodge to sing karaoke and waddle around like you've got a load in your pants.

I also had to cough up for rental equipment, which meant trekking to the ski shop and dealing with dudes who'd apparently ingested a handful of Colorado's legal medibles before showing up for work. When one 60-ish guy walked in to return skis, the rental guy greeted him with "Hey bud, did you shred the gnar?" Understandably, this query was met with a puzzled stare from the would-be gnar-shredder.

Once I was out on the mountain, I began keeping a mental tally of the cost per run, calculating when I'd sufficiently justify my lift-ticket investment. Each time I'd think about quitting, I'd do the math and get back in the lift line to brave another trip up the mountain. Big shoutout to the guy who sat next to me and blew snot rockets as the wind whipped across the chair in my direction. I hope your helmet GoPro captured rad footage of your mucus spraying all over the three guys to your right.

Ah, the helmet cam. Half the people on the slopes were wearing GoPros, some of them mounted to elaborate jib poles sprouting off their backs, making it look like they had snagged part of the chairlift arm on the way off. On the first day, the GoProers were the subject of my withering contempt. Wow, dude, you're killing that blue square! It's gonna be awesome to cue that up and relive all three hours of it later. Your friends will think you're so cool! Wait, you don't have any friends.

But then I remembered that I had a GoPro in my luggage, so the next day I brought it and just held it in my hand for a few runs. And you know what? It is really entertaining to go back and look at the footage. Mostly because the GoPro provides forensic evidence proving how dumb we all are. At one point, a conversation transpires in which my friend Scott, staring down a steep slope, says, "Wanna see how fast we can go?" This is not a proposal that typically ends well.

About 30 seconds later, my friend Dave loses an edge and cannonballs into the powder bordering the trail at 53 mph, looking like a snowbound version of one of those Wide World of Sports unlimited hydroplane boat crashes from the '80s. A guy skiing past notices the GoPro and says, "I hope you got that on film." Oh, I did. And thanks to compact waterproof cameras, that yard sale and about five others will soon be edited into a montage and set to "Yakety Sax," thus giving me some added value for that criminally expensive lift ticket.

Now, you might ask, how did I know that Dave wiped out at 53 mph? Because we were all running ski tracking apps on our phones, logging distance and top speed. Back in the day, you'd clop over to the bar in your ski boots and say, "I skied a lot, and I went pretty fast. I'm awesome." The experience was ephemeral, impossible to quantify. Now I can say that I skied 13,277 vertical feet and hit 52.9 mph, and next time I shall surely try to beat those numbers. Like Bourbon Street and Mitt Romney speeches, skiing is yet another formerly wild and carefree thing ruined by phones and omnipresent cameras.

When I learned that I had nearly hit highway speed atop a pair of sticks, I immediately headed to the ski shop to make another purchase: a helmet. In a small act of defiance, I bought one without a GoPro mount. From now on, if I tell you I shredded the gnar, you'll just have to take my word for it. ◆

Soroff On / Jeff Kinney

FOREVER YOUNG

THE BEST-SELLING CHILDREN'S AUTHOR SOUNDS OFF ON VIDEO GAMES, SPEEDOS AND HIS INNER KID.

JEFF KINNEY, 44, IS THE BEST-SELLING AUTHOR OF THE Diary of a Wimpy Kid series, a cartoon-filled chronicle of the life of middle-schooler Greg Heffley. Kinney worked on the book for almost six years before publishing it as a web comic in 2005, offering daily installments on Funbrain.com. The online version has had more than 80 million visits and is read by more than 70,000 people a day. In 2006, Kinney signed a multi-book deal to turn Diary of a Wimpy Kid into a print series. Released in 2007, it quickly became a No. 1 New York Times best-seller and spawned three films that have grossed more than $225 million worldwide. In 2007, Kinney also created the online gaming company Poptropica.com, where he serves as creative and editorial director. He lives in southern Massachusetts with his wife and two sons, and he plans to open An Unlikely Story, a 3,000-square-foot bookstore and cafe, in Plainville this spring.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So were you once a wimpy kid?
JEFF KINNEY: I was an average kid with extremely wimpy moments. For example, I would hide from my swim coach in the locker room, and it would get so cold that I'd wrap myself in toilet paper to stay warm. That's where Greg Heffley was born—me wrapped up like a mummy in toilet paper, wearing a Speedo.

What was the original inspiration for the books? I wanted to be a newspaper cartoonist and couldn't break in, so I had to figure out a way to get my comics published somehow. So I decided to put them in book form. But specifically, I was reading the Harry Potter books, and Harry Potter might seem like an underdog, but he's really not. He's powerful. He's famous. He's rich. He's brave. He's a good athlete. All the things I was not. And I thought it would be fun to write about a kid who was more like me.

Who are your biggest fans? I'd say the sweet spot is fourth- or fifth-grade boys, but they seem to be popular in grades two through six.

It seems like your books have become primers on dealing with all the things grade school kids dread about middle school. I used to look at my books as a way to get kids to laugh at their own circumstances, but I've come to find out that my books actually terrify a lot of grade school kids. I guess they depict middle school as Dante's ninth ring of hell. When I first met the kids who were doing the movie, they were just getting ready to go into middle school, and they were really scared about it just because of my books.

Speaking of the movies, you've acted in two of them. What was that like? I'm assuming you're putting quotes around the word acting. It was agony. I felt self-conscious. I didn't belong there at all. I think I ruined the scenes I appeared in. I don't think I'll do that again.

Best fan encounter? Once a kid told me that his father was a bigwig with Gulfstream, and he was offering me a ride on a private jet. On the one hand, I thought, "This is extremely bizarre," but it was tempting.

How do you stay kid-like enough to write for your audience? I've always felt I have a kid's sensibilities. When it comes to my breakfast cereal, I tend to gravitate toward things like Fruity Pebbles. So I feel like I've never quite grown up.

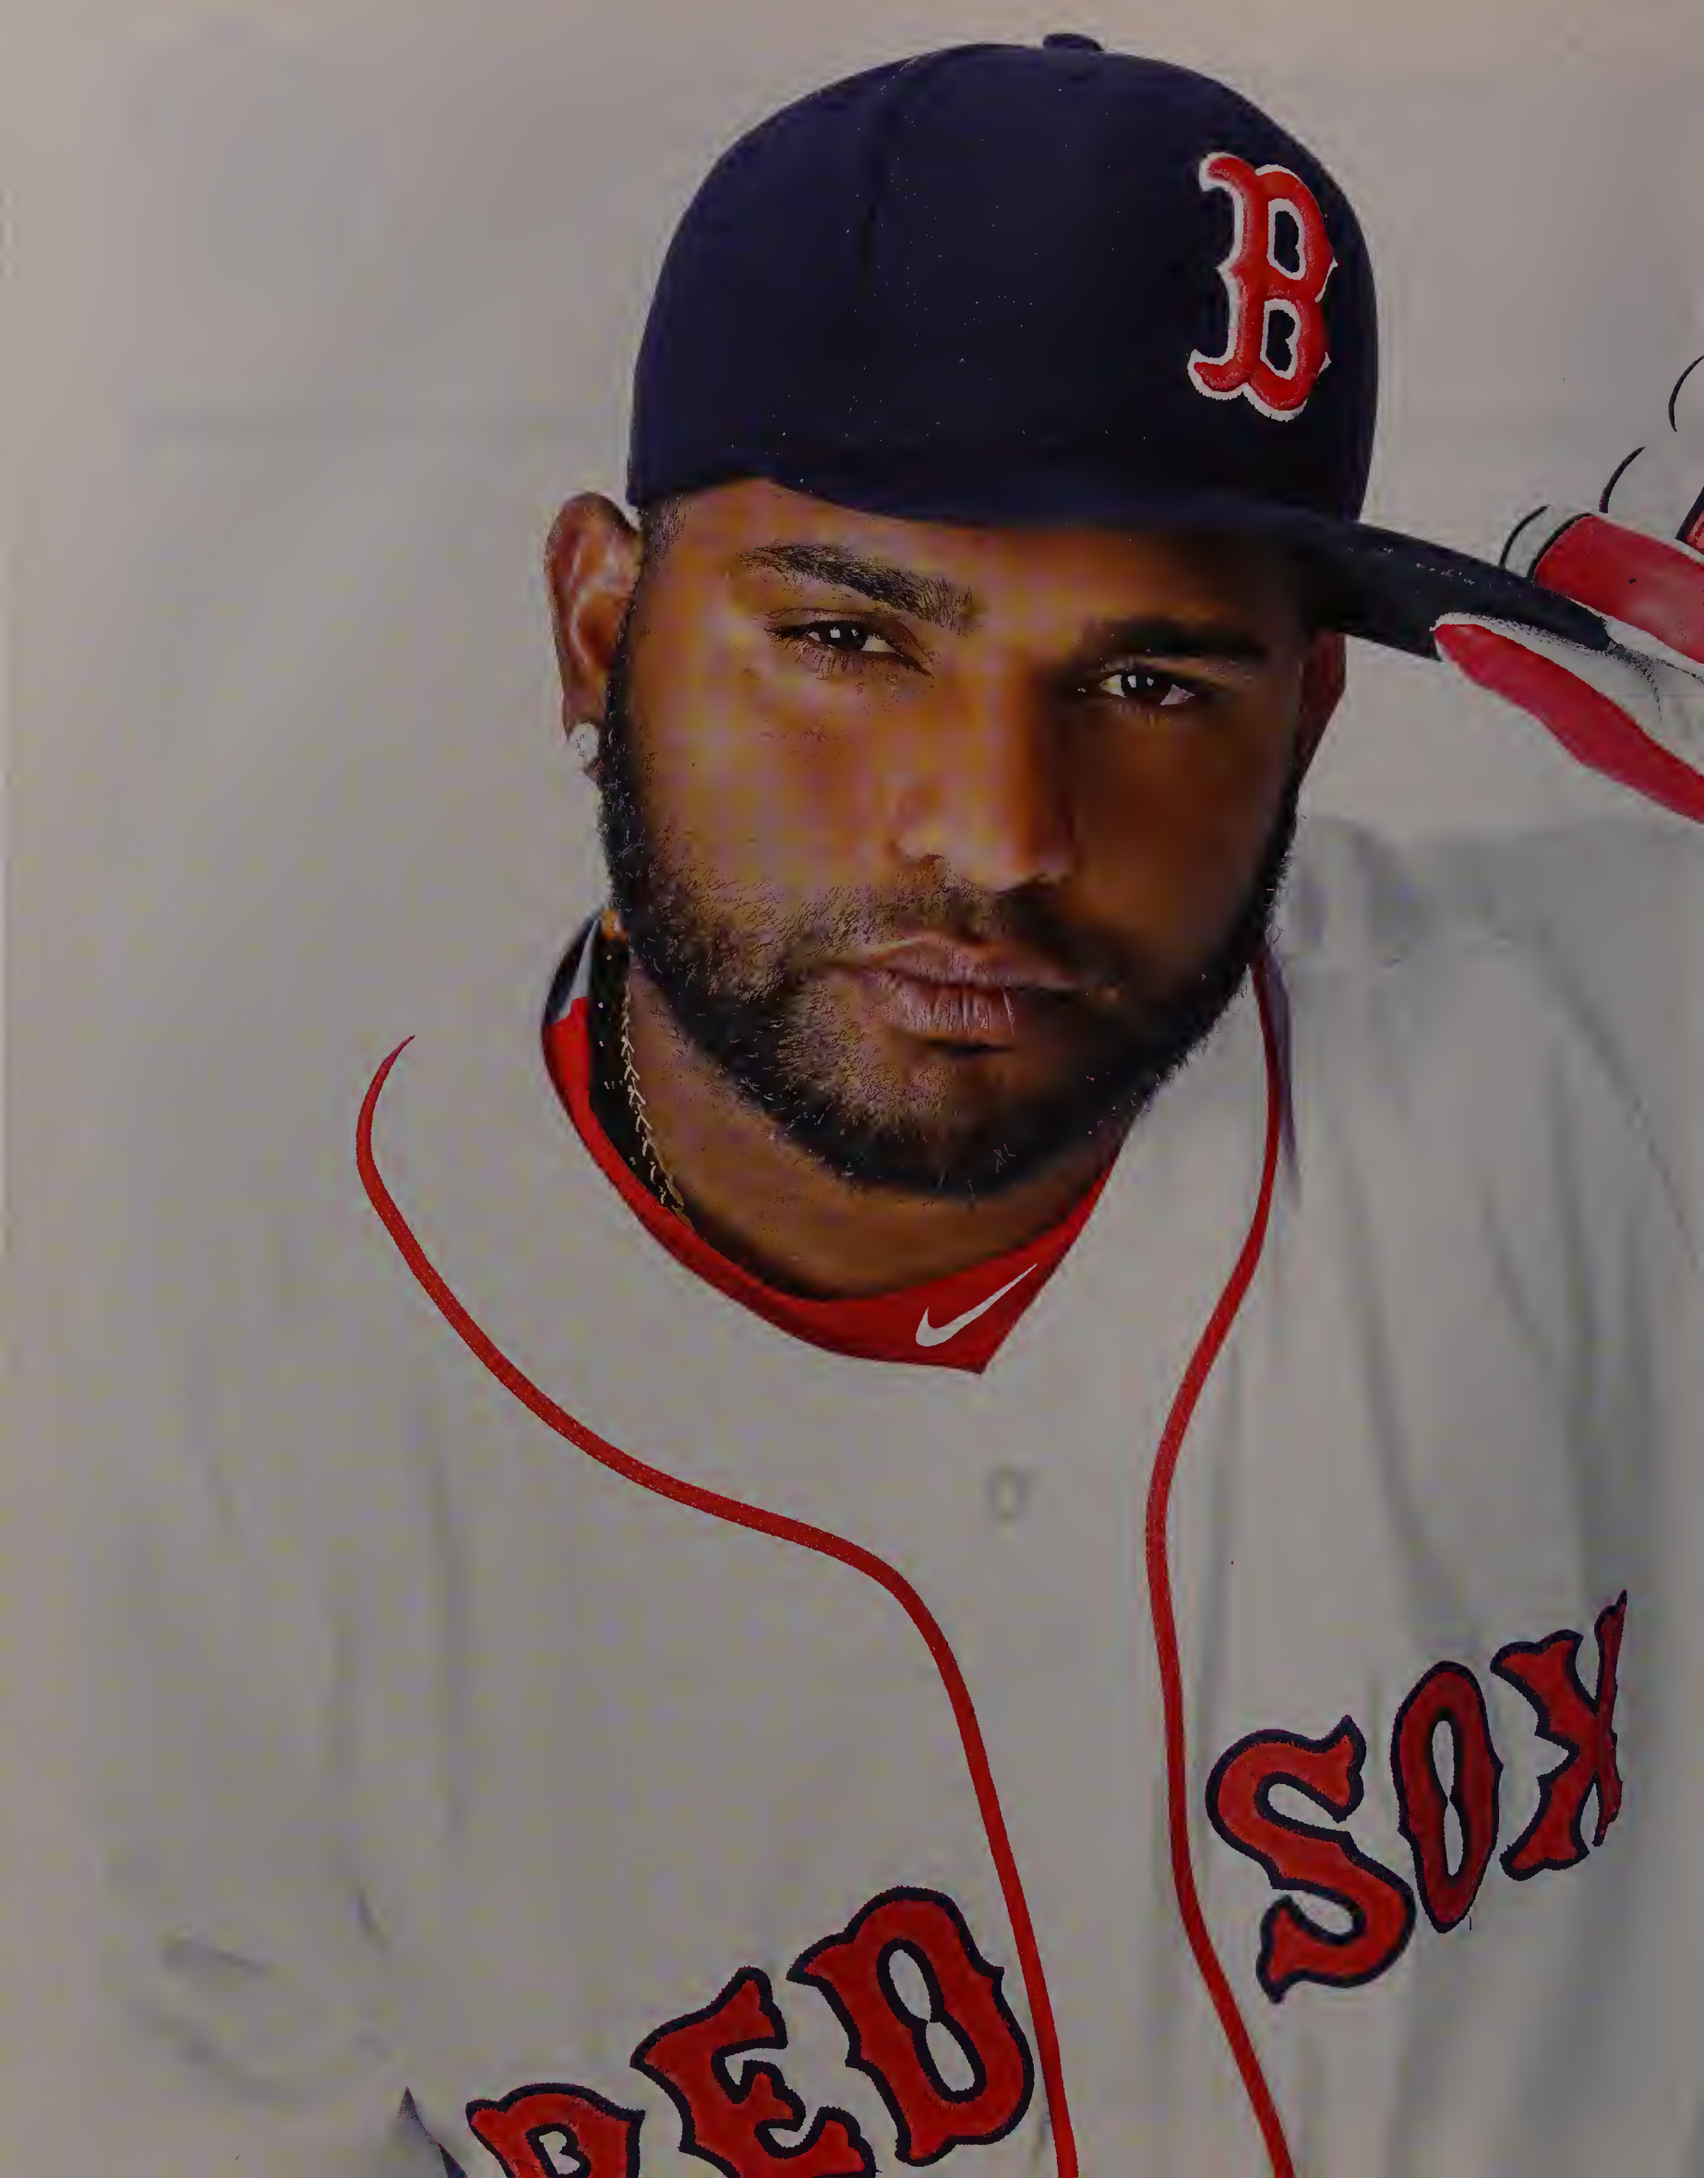
"I've come to find out that my books actually terrify a lot of grade school kids."

You have kids. What's their response to the books? My kids are 9 and 12, both boys, and I keep the books and all the Wimpy Kid stuff out of the house, so they're not inundated by it. But every so often, they'll use it. My younger son sometimes uses his notoriety to make friends or brag a little bit, and it's kind of fun to see him get a little something out of it.

Do you think of yourself as a gamer? No. About 18 years ago, I used to play a lot of video games, and at the end of a session, everybody would say where they lived. There were all these exotic places, like Fiji and Australia, and I felt very sophisticated and worldly for playing this particular game. Then, one day, someone said, "How old are you?" and almost everyone rang in with 10, 11, 12. I took my hands off the keyboard, and I've never played another online game. But I write video games.

How do you write them without playing them? I have my video game sensibility, and that comes from the EA games from the 1980s, like King's Quest and games of that ilk. So I try to write games that I would have liked as a kid—games where you go on a quest, and solving puzzles. Not so much the action-packed arcade-like games. I like games where you have to use your brain.

So why open a bookstore? When I was a kid, we had a neighborhood bookstore that vanished one day. In recent years, we've seen so many bookstores close. I'm happy to be in a position to fight back and add another bookstore to the landscape.



Do you think independent bookstores will survive Amazon? I do. We buy from Amazon, but a bookstore is a very special space that's hard to replicate on a screen.

Merchandising opportunity that you've turned down? In the U.K. they wanted to do tighty-whities with Greg Heffley's face emblazoned on them, and I said, "I really don't think we should go there."

Is there a culture where it seems like kids just don't get the Wimpy Kid series? Good question. For a while there, it didn't do well in France, despite doing well in other European countries, but just recently it started to do well there. I've always been surprised by where it does do well. It's very strong in rural Brazil, where a large number of the copies are delivered by salesmen going up the Amazon in canoes. That strikes me as a strange thing.

Greg's family is sort of uniformly unlikable, no? I was recently interviewed by CBS Sunday Morning, and the reporter said, "What's with the Heffley family? They're really awful." It took me by surprise, because these are the people I know and love. In some ways, everybody's family is awful, but they're your family, and you love them. ◆

Switch Hitter

BY Scott Lauber

PABLO SANDOVAL STEPPED OFF THE DOUBLE-DECKER BUS THAT CARRIED HIM along the jam-packed streets of downtown San Francisco and walked into a staging area in City Hall. Two nights earlier, halfway across the country, he scored the go-ahead run and caught the final out of the deciding game of the World Series. But now, inquiring minds wanted to know whether he would agree to a new contract with the Giants, who signed him as a 16-year-old in 2003. "I want to wear that jersey the rest of my career," Sandoval said.

WHY NOT? THE PORTLY SWITCH-HITTER with the bright smile and the cool nickname—"Kung Fu Panda," coined by former teammate Barry Zito as a tribute to Sandoval's personality and girth—was immensely popular among baseball fans in the Bay Area, even inspiring a line of furry orange-and-black panda heads. A two-time All-Star, he had just won his third World Series in five years. And the Giants wanted to keep him in San Francisco for a long time. Long enough that they were preparing an offer that would top any he received on the open market.

So when Sandoval sat alongside victorious teammates and club officials at a press conference and declared that he wanted to be a Giants player for life, there wasn't any reason to doubt his sincerity.

Except it wasn't true.

Everyone is entitled to a change of heart, of course. And maybe Sandoval never had as much fun as it appeared in San Francisco, far from his family on the north coast of Venezuela. But it's still a mystery to Giants assistant general manager and Framingham native Bobby Evans why Sandoval chose to cut off negotiations in the second to last week of November, before San Francisco could make its final bid. The Giants were willing to go even higher than the winning five-year $95 million offer that makes the 28-year-old Venezuelan the game's second-highest paid third baseman, behind David Wright of the New York Mets.

"We weren't going at it halfway," Evans says. "He was a Giant, and for us, he should've always stayed a Giant. I think there's no player that loved his fan base as passionately or had a fan base that supported him as passionately. It was tough to see him go."

Turns out, it wasn't as difficult for Sandoval. Less than a month later, he was standing at Fenway Park, his arm around a man in a panda costume, being introduced as the new third baseman for the Red Sox.

HAVING COMPLETED HIS SPRING-TRAINING workout shortly before noon on a blazing hot February day in southwest Florida, Sandoval returns to his locker at the Red Sox's player-development complex and fields my first question—an obvious one. Why leave the only team you had ever played for, to say nothing of a desirable city where you were always cheered, after winning a third World Series ring, especially since that team wanted you back and was willing to pay top dollar to keep you?

"I did a lot of things out there. I wanted to try something new," Sandoval says. "I told myself that's what I wanted—a new challenge."

Yeah, his friends aren't buying it either.

"They thought I was crazy that I left the only team I was playing for to come here," Sandoval says, a mischievous smile stretching across his face. "My friend told me it like this: I come from first place [San Francisco] to last place [Boston]. Crazy."

A few weeks later, the truth comes out. Sandoval tells Bleacher Report that he felt the Giants disrespected him before last season by making an offer that Evans claims to have been for four years and $85 million—or one year and $5 million less than the extension they gave to right fielder Hunter Pence in 2013. Then, Sandoval delivers the dagger to the Giants' backs. He says he won't miss anyone in the organization aside from Pence and manager Bruce Bochy.

What ensues is a long-distance volley of insults between Sandoval and current and former teammates. On Facebook, ex-Giants infielder Aubrey Huff calls out Sandoval for being selfish, to which Sandoval says in a Spanish-language interview with ESPN Deportes, "Who's Aubrey Huff?" Meanwhile, Giants outfielder Gregor Blanco, one of Sandoval's closer friends, tells the San Francisco Chronicle that the Panda will come to regret his disparaging comments. But regardless of the nasty back-and-forth, by the end of spring training, one thing is clear: Sandoval is much less concerned about burning bridges with his old team than building a foundation with his new one.

"When I got so many [free agent] opportunities on the table, I said I was just going to take my chance and go with a team that I feel comfortable with," Sandoval says. "The opportunity that these guys showed me, I love being part of the Red Sox. So that's the chance I took."

It's true: The Red Sox did make Sandoval feel wanted. Then again, what choice did they have? During the past two seasons, few teams derived less offense from the third base position. Rather than fulfilling his vast potential, injury-prone Will Middlebrooks began getting more attention for dating former NESN reporter Jenny Dell. Tired of waiting for Middlebrooks, the Sox went all-in on Sandoval, a significant upgrade even though his OPS (on-base percentage plus slugging percentage) had steadily declined from .909 in 2011 to .739 last year.

Sandoval had never been to Boston, so in mid-November, as part of the free-agency courtship, the Red Sox invited him to town for a red-carpet tour of Fenway Park. He was accompanied by his older brother Michael, who'd signed with the Minnesota Twins in 1999 and advanced to Class A in 2004 before his career fizzled. He'd been an early influence on Pablo, who had an interest in basketball before gravitating to his brother's favorite game.

"I didn't know baseball a lot, so he showed me a lot of things about it," Pablo says, recalling how Michael would pitch to him when they were kids. "We played together back in the yard. It's big time for me that he's sharing this with me, because he cared about me when I was a little kid. This means a lot."

The brothers were ambushed at Logan Airport by a Ch. 7 (WHDH-TV) news crew, so there weren't any subsequent Panda sightings around town. Despite reports at the time that he went to dinner with David Ortiz, Sandoval says he intentionally stayed in his hotel when he wasn't meeting with Sox officials on Yawkey Way.

"I didn't want no one seeing me out there," says Sandoval, who was also being wooed by the Giants and the San Diego Padres at the time. "I hope that during the season I'll have a chance to see the city and eat at a couple restaurants. But I didn't want no one seeing me at that time."

Regardless of whether they broke bread together, you'd better believe Ortiz's presence helped draw Sandoval to Boston. Panda has long admired Big Papi, and the chance to play with a slugger he respects was enticing. During his introductory press conference at Fenway Park on Nov. 25, Sandoval even dubbed himself, newly signed left fielder Hanley Ramirez and Ortiz as "Tres Amigos"—a dream come true for every Red Sox marketing executive.

"I want [critics] to spend one day with me to see how hard I work."

"He's a great player, one of the best in the league," Sandoval says of Ortiz. "I just want to spend time with him and have fun."

Apparently, it wasn't always fun in San Francisco.

Although Sandoval finished second to new Red Sox teammate Ramirez in the National League batting race in 2009, he weighed more than 270 pounds. Giants officials said they feared that if they didn't intervene, he would eat his way out of the big leagues.

So they designed an offseason training program—"Operation Panda," they called it—that introduced Sandoval to weight lifting and changed his diet. He lost about 30 pounds, although both he and the team were careful to keep his actual weight a secret.

Former Giants center fielder Aaron Rowand recalls that it "wasn't a pleasant situation for Pablo because they put a lot of pressure on him to go and do that."

"It was different," Sandoval says. "They made me do some different things I didn't always like. But you learn a lot of things from that. After that, you keep your own things. You hire your own trainer and find things you like about it."

According to Evans, Sandoval's weight was "a constant discussion point" during his seven seasons with the Giants. "We've always felt that there wasn't a lack of work ethic on his part, but there was clearly more at play in terms of maintaining a weight that we thought was OK," Evans says. "It was a challenge. But I think he's a special individual, a very talented ballplayer, and unfortunately he has that challenge. He works hard to get it to the right level, but it's just hard to maintain. There's no other way to say it."

But regardless of his fluctuating waistline, Sandoval produced. He came up as a catcher, made the full-time switch to third base in 2010 and has en a borderline Gold Glover ever since. At the ite, Sandoval is what Rowand calls "one of the best d-ball hitters I've ever seen." There seemingly isn't art of the strike zone that the Panda can't reach.

cording to numbers compiled at Fangraphs.com, has swung at 58.3 percent of pitches during his ven-year career, including 45.7 percent of pitches it are out of the strike zone, and has never struck t more than 85 times in a season. By comparison, tiz has offered at 44.8 percent of pitches, 22.2
rcent out of the strike zone.

Sandoval doesn't put on power displays in batting ictice. Instead, he sprays line drives all over the field m both sides of the plate. It's that ability to make nsistent contact with most pitches and drive the ball o the power alleys that led the Sox to identify him as rget during the offseason.

"It doesn't matter where the ball is thrown. This guy going to square it up and hit it really hard no matter ere you throw it," Rowand says. "I mean, he can just t-out hit. There's no rhyme or reason for it because ne of the things he does people would call a little orthodox, with just swinging out of his shoes every ch. But he got it done. He has that knack, that hand-e coordination."

Rowand played with Sandoval from 2008 to 11, during which time Panda batted .307 with 64 mers and an .857 OPS in 463 games. But his real eakthrough came during the 2012 World Series.
hit three home runs in Game 1 against the Detroit gers and batted .500 (8 for 16) overall in the Giants' ur-game sweep.

Sandoval's playoff performances are downright tizian. Last year, he set a postseason record with 26
s, and if not for the pitching heroics of Giants lefty ndison Bumgarner, he would've collected another orld Series MVP award to put next to his 2012 trophy.

Like everyone else, though, Rowand once wondered w long Sandoval could stay in the big leagues if he ot carrying so much weight. Even now, he questions ether Sandoval will have to move to first base or en designated hitter before his Red Sox contract pires.

But the Sox knew they needed to order an XXL iform when they signed Sandoval. So when a ston.com producer snapped an unflattering photo of n with his belly hanging over his shorts and posted it ove a snarky comment on Twitter, club officials barely nked. As general manager Ben Cherington says: ablo is always going to look like Pablo. You're going to tice him when he walks on the field."

In fairness, Sandoval's weight didn't scare the ants out of making a long-term commitment. Evans /s Sandoval's age relative to most free agents helped t them at ease. But it's entirely possible that so many ars of hearing about how much he tips the scale ntributed to Sandoval's desire to make a change.

sticking out his belly for what teammates called a anda Pose" in a self-effacing Twitter picture with mirez and pitcher Joe Kelly. He even challenged his tics to watch him work out.

"Everybody's posting pictures of me. I don't care," ndoval says. "I love them. I'm making fun of it. I've t other pictures out there making fun of it because ant [critics] to spend one day with me to see how rd I work."

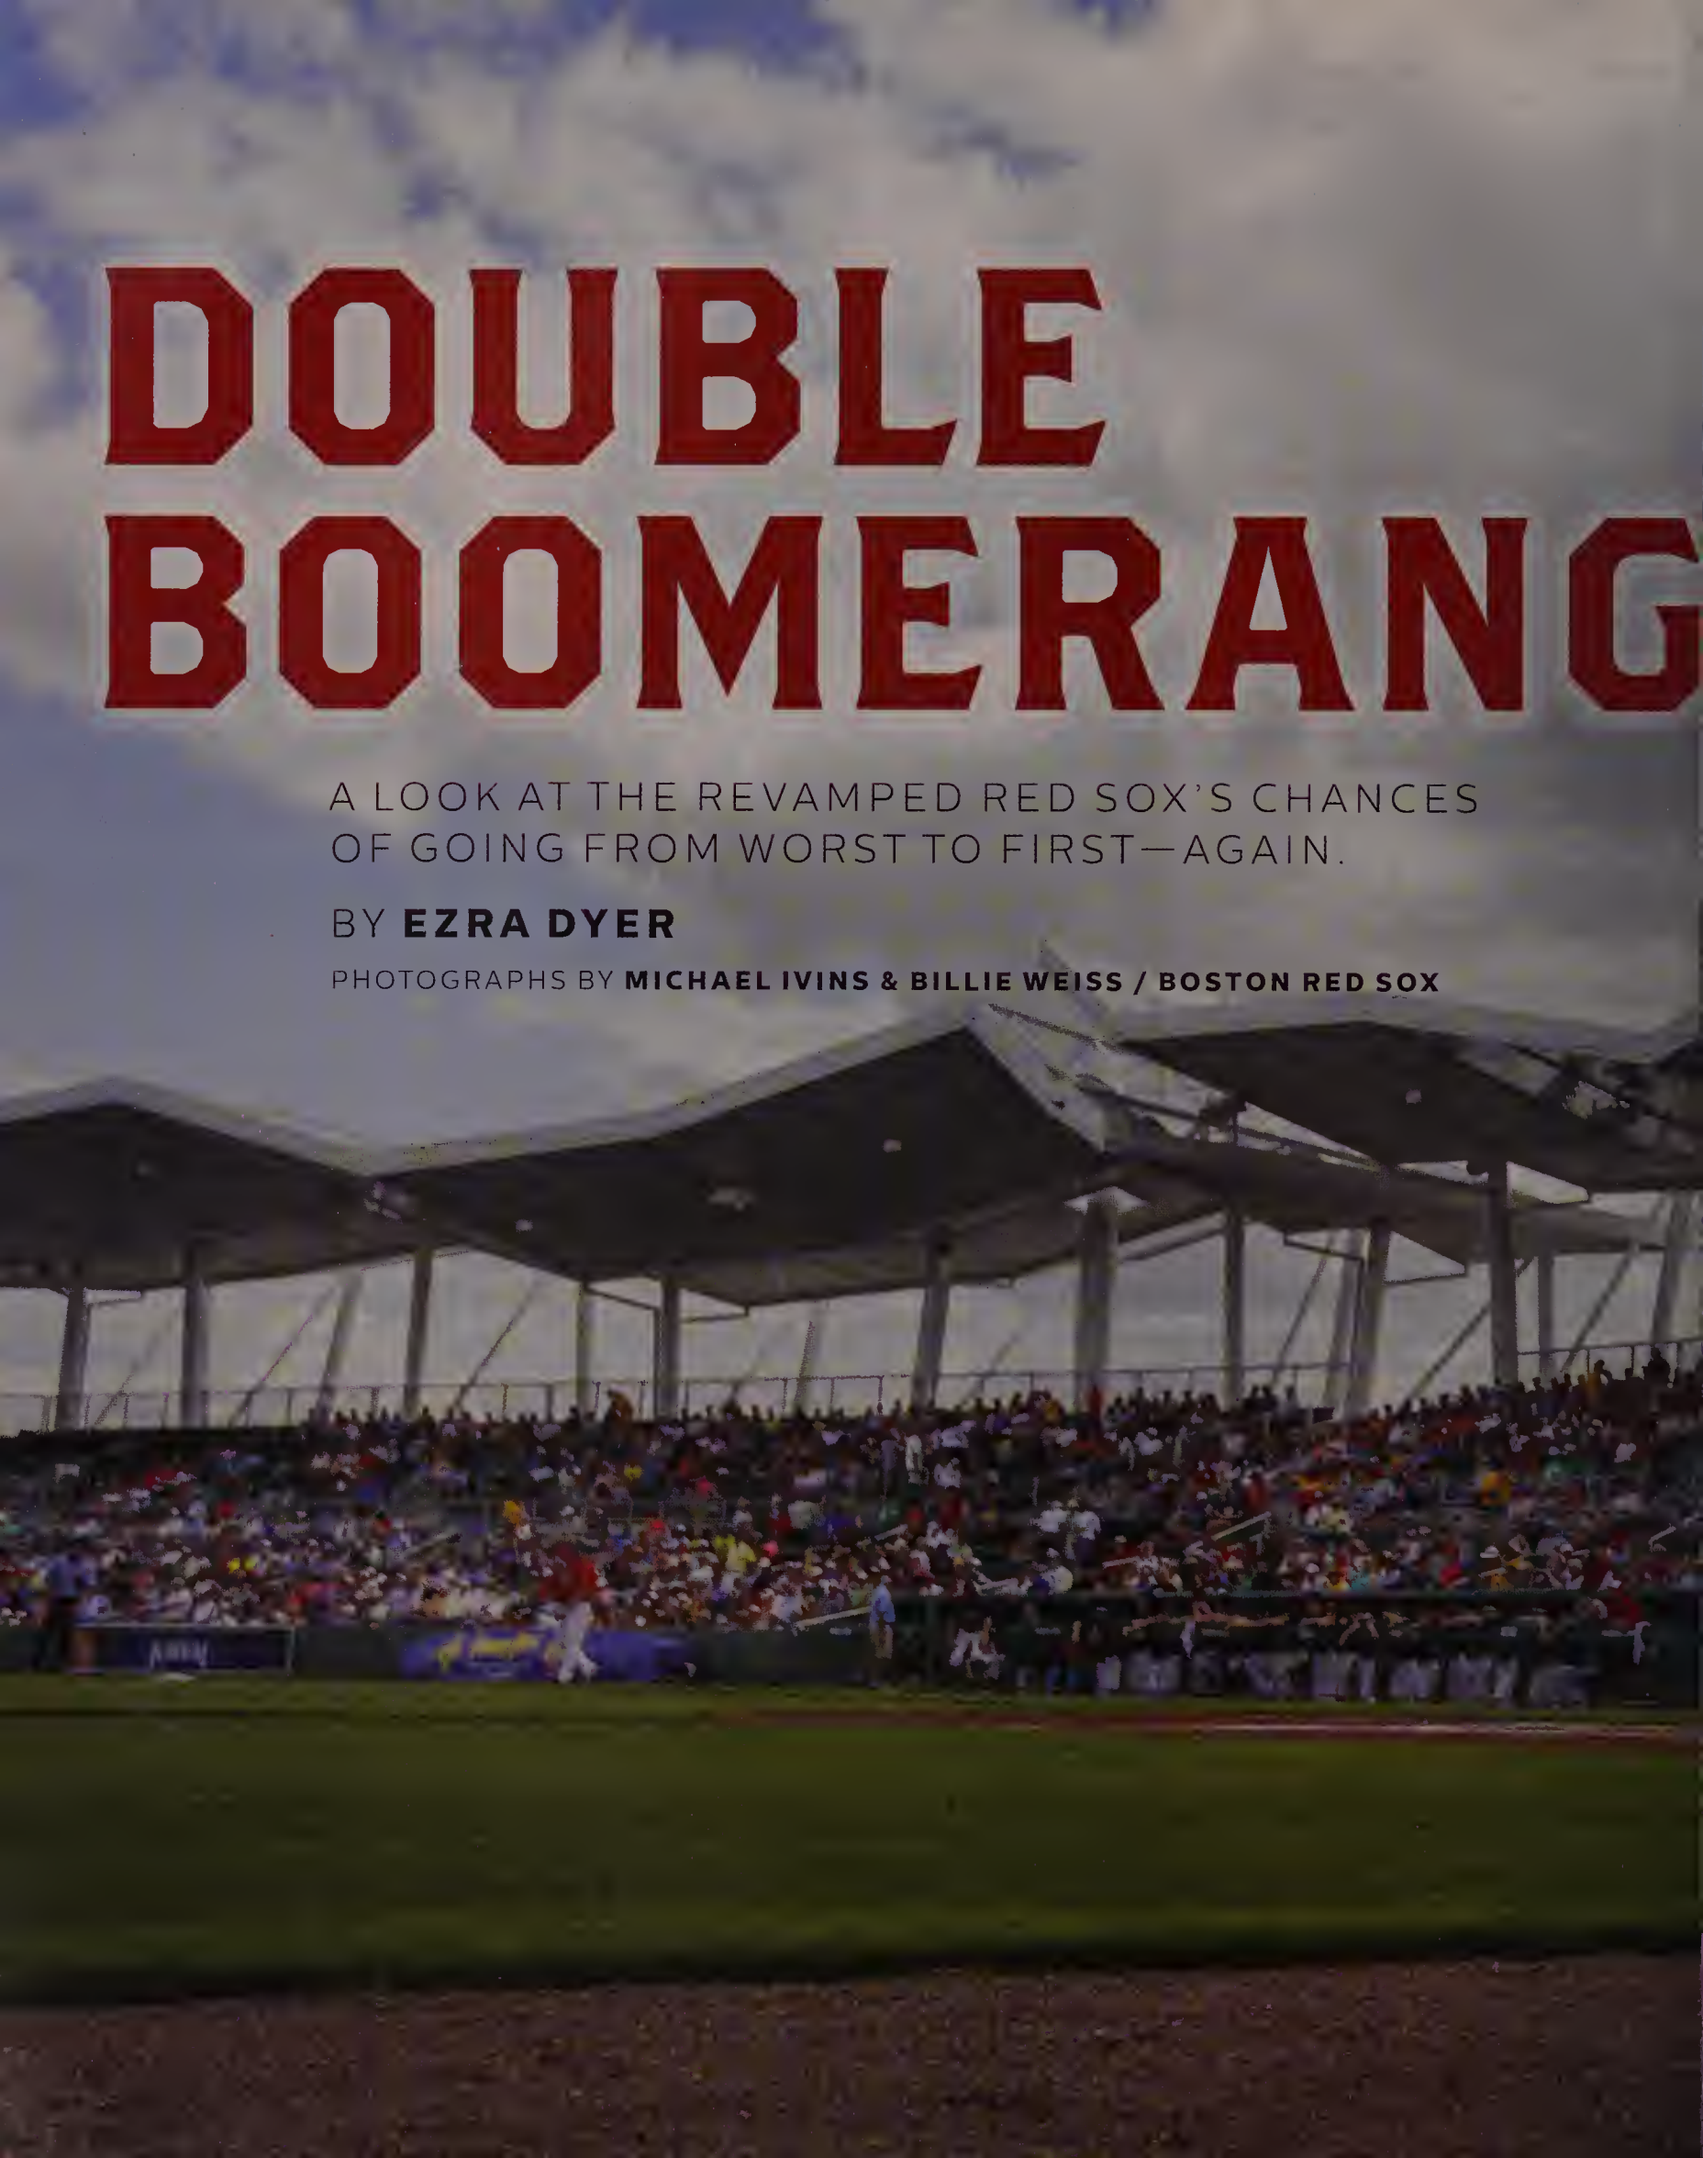
The Panda is getting feisty. And he's having fun
ain. Maybe he really did need a change after all. ◆



DOUBLE BOOMERANG

A LOOK AT THE REVAMPED RED SOX'S CHANCES OF GOING FROM WORST TO FIRST—AGAIN.

BY EZRA DYER

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MICHAEL IVINS & BILLIE WEISS / BOSTON RED SOX

DUSTIN

Ah, the luxury of mediocrity...

Last year's Red Sox squad was so miserable, so tediously incompetent, it was clear by July that playoff beards wouldn't be necessary and that Papi could spend October planning his Halloween costume. The last two months of the season were a joke, as Ben Cherington furiously began building the 2015 Red Sox while they were still, technically, the 2014 Red Sox. While you were stuck in traffic on the Cape, Cherington was scheming to pull off the rare double boomerang: worst to first to worst to first. **>>>

HANLEY RAMIREZ

RUSNEY CASTILLO AND PABLO SANDOVAL

By the tail end of the season, the team looked nothing like the juggernaut that won the 2013 World Series. Jon Lester and John Lackey, the heart of the pitching rotation: gone. Mookie Betts, center field phenom: playing. Next thing you knew, you were stuffing your face with a Fenway Frank and saying, "Who's Rusney Castillo?" Whiplash—it's not just a movie about drumming!

So here we are, retooled. That's the nice thing about patently awful team: 2014 wasn't a Dan Duquette-style lineup that caused fans to torment themselves wondering if there was one trade that would've pushed the Sox over the top. (Or, worse yet, one managerial decision... see: 2003.) They were so bad that they couldn't get any worse. And as the old saying goes, when you're in the basement, the ground floor looks like the penthouse. That's what Mike Greenwell always used to say whenever his airboat broke down in the Everglades, and it still holds true now. So, can the Red Sox go from last place to a championship? Hey, that's how it happened last time. Now let's take a look at our prospects for October baseball.

Welcome the HanRam

OK, now let's never call him that again. Once again, the Red Sox have a slugger named Ramirez in left field, but this time he hails from planet Earth and doesn't periodically sneak into the Green Monster to eat peanut butter and jelly sandwiches. (This is purely speculation as to what Manny was up to in there.) Welcome, Hanley Ramirez! Or should we say, welcome back—because Ramirez was a Red Sox once before, when he was a top prospect in the organization. In 2005 he came up for the briefest sip of coffee, getting two at-bats and going 0-for-2 with two strikeouts. That November he was traded to the Marlins.

After that? The next season Ramirez was National League Rookie of the Year and went on to three All-Star games, hitting .332 with 29 homers in 2007. On the other side of the ledger, the trade that sent him to Florida also netted us Josh Beckett and Mike Lowell, so we can't complain about how that turned out. But it's nice to have the big guy back where he started. He probably won't put up 2007-style numbers, but he's still a major upgrade for an outfield that at one point last year earned a WAR (wins above replacement) stat that was last in the league.

The good news is—as opposed to last season—we have more options than we can use.

Mookie "Safe" Betts

There are many names that live in Red Sox infamy, but "Mookie" is right up near the top, for it was Mookie Wilson who hit the grounder between Bill Buckner's legs in Game 6 of the 1986 World Series. Now here we are, nearly 30 years later, and we're going to be rooting for Mookie. The world is a funny place, and full of more Mookies than you'd expect.

This one, Mr. Betts, has decisively won the starting center field job, making the Jackie Bradley Jr. experiment feel like it happened a very long time ago. The final two months of the season—garbage time, really—he hit almost .300 and drove in 16 runs, four of which came on a grand slam. We'll see what he does when there's actual pressure to make the postseason, but as we write this, Betts is batting an insane .458 for spring training. He's blazing fast, he's got a great glove and his power belies his slight size (5 feet 9 inches tall, 155 pounds). Sure, a great spring does not guarantee 162 games of excellence, but Betts looks like the best thing to happen to Fenway's center field since Ellsbury left town.

MOOKIE BETTS

Meanwhile, Elsewhere in the Outfield...

Shane Victorino's getting $13 million for 2015, the last year of his three-year contract. After his injury-riddled 2014 season, in which he only played 30 games, Victorino has a lot to prove—likely for his next team, since he's a free agent next year and the Sox signed Rusney Castillo to a seven-year $72.5 million contract. With Betts locking down center field, that should have set up a Castillo-Victorino timeshare in right field. And that would've been a gol' diggity expensive right field. In inflation-adjusted dollars, the Victorino-Castillo platoon would cost just about twice the budget for the movie Platoon. So, can you say trade bait? Staying healthy will be key for Victorino, and to that end he's announced that he's giving up on switch-hitting for 2015, since batting lefty takes a physical toll that he can't tolerate (also: maybe it's just not worth it, production-wise).

To start the season, Castillo will chill in Pawtucket while Victorino either plays himself into a tradeable commodity or doesn't. The good news is—as opposed to last season—we have more options than we can use.

Beware the Panda

You know how pandas look cute but are actually ferocious? Wait, maybe that's koalas. Anyway, Pablo "Kung Fu Panda" Sandoval is a pretty ferocious hitter, with a lifetime average near .300. He's also a surprisingly deft infielder, in a Chris Farley-doing-a-

A Few Words on the Starting Rotation

Clay Buchholz

He's an enigma wrapped within a quandary, floating in a sea of unpredictability. There are two versions of Clay Buchholz. Famously, we have the 2010 and 2013 models, which are double-platinum stone-cold All-Star caliber. Then there are the other years. Please, please let this not be one of the others.

Justin Masterson

OK, Masterson's lost some heat, topping out in the high 80s. But he's a sinkerball pitcher, a guy whose aim is to induce grounders rather than power his way to strikeouts. Let's think of him as the Derek Lowe of this rotation.

Joe Kelly

Here's what you need to know about starting pitcher Joe Kelly: In 2013 he was 10-5 with a 2.69 ERA. He has Brock Holt is in his phone contact list as "Brocky Balboa." And in his Twitter bio, he describes himself as "the Incredible Hunk." OK, we'll give him that, but only because Gabe Kapler's not in town anymore.

Wade Miley

Miley was one of the fastest pitchers in the league last year. Not in terms of his arm speed, but the lack of screwing around between pitches. In one game during spring training, he spent 19 minutes on the mound—in five innings. David Ortiz is surely glad that he and Miley are on the same team so that he doesn't have to face him.

Rick Porcello

Last year, Porcello had 15 wins, a 3.43 ERA and 129 strikeouts with the Tigers. He's also logged more than a thousand innings during the past six years, which either tells you that he's legitimately durable or due for those thousand innings to catch up with him. Uh, the first one, let's hope?

Sometimes the abject do-over, the admission of failure, is the quickest path back to success.

ɪtwheel sort of way. (Sandoval is listed at 255 pounds, ɪd one of his other nicknames is "Round Mound of ɪund.")

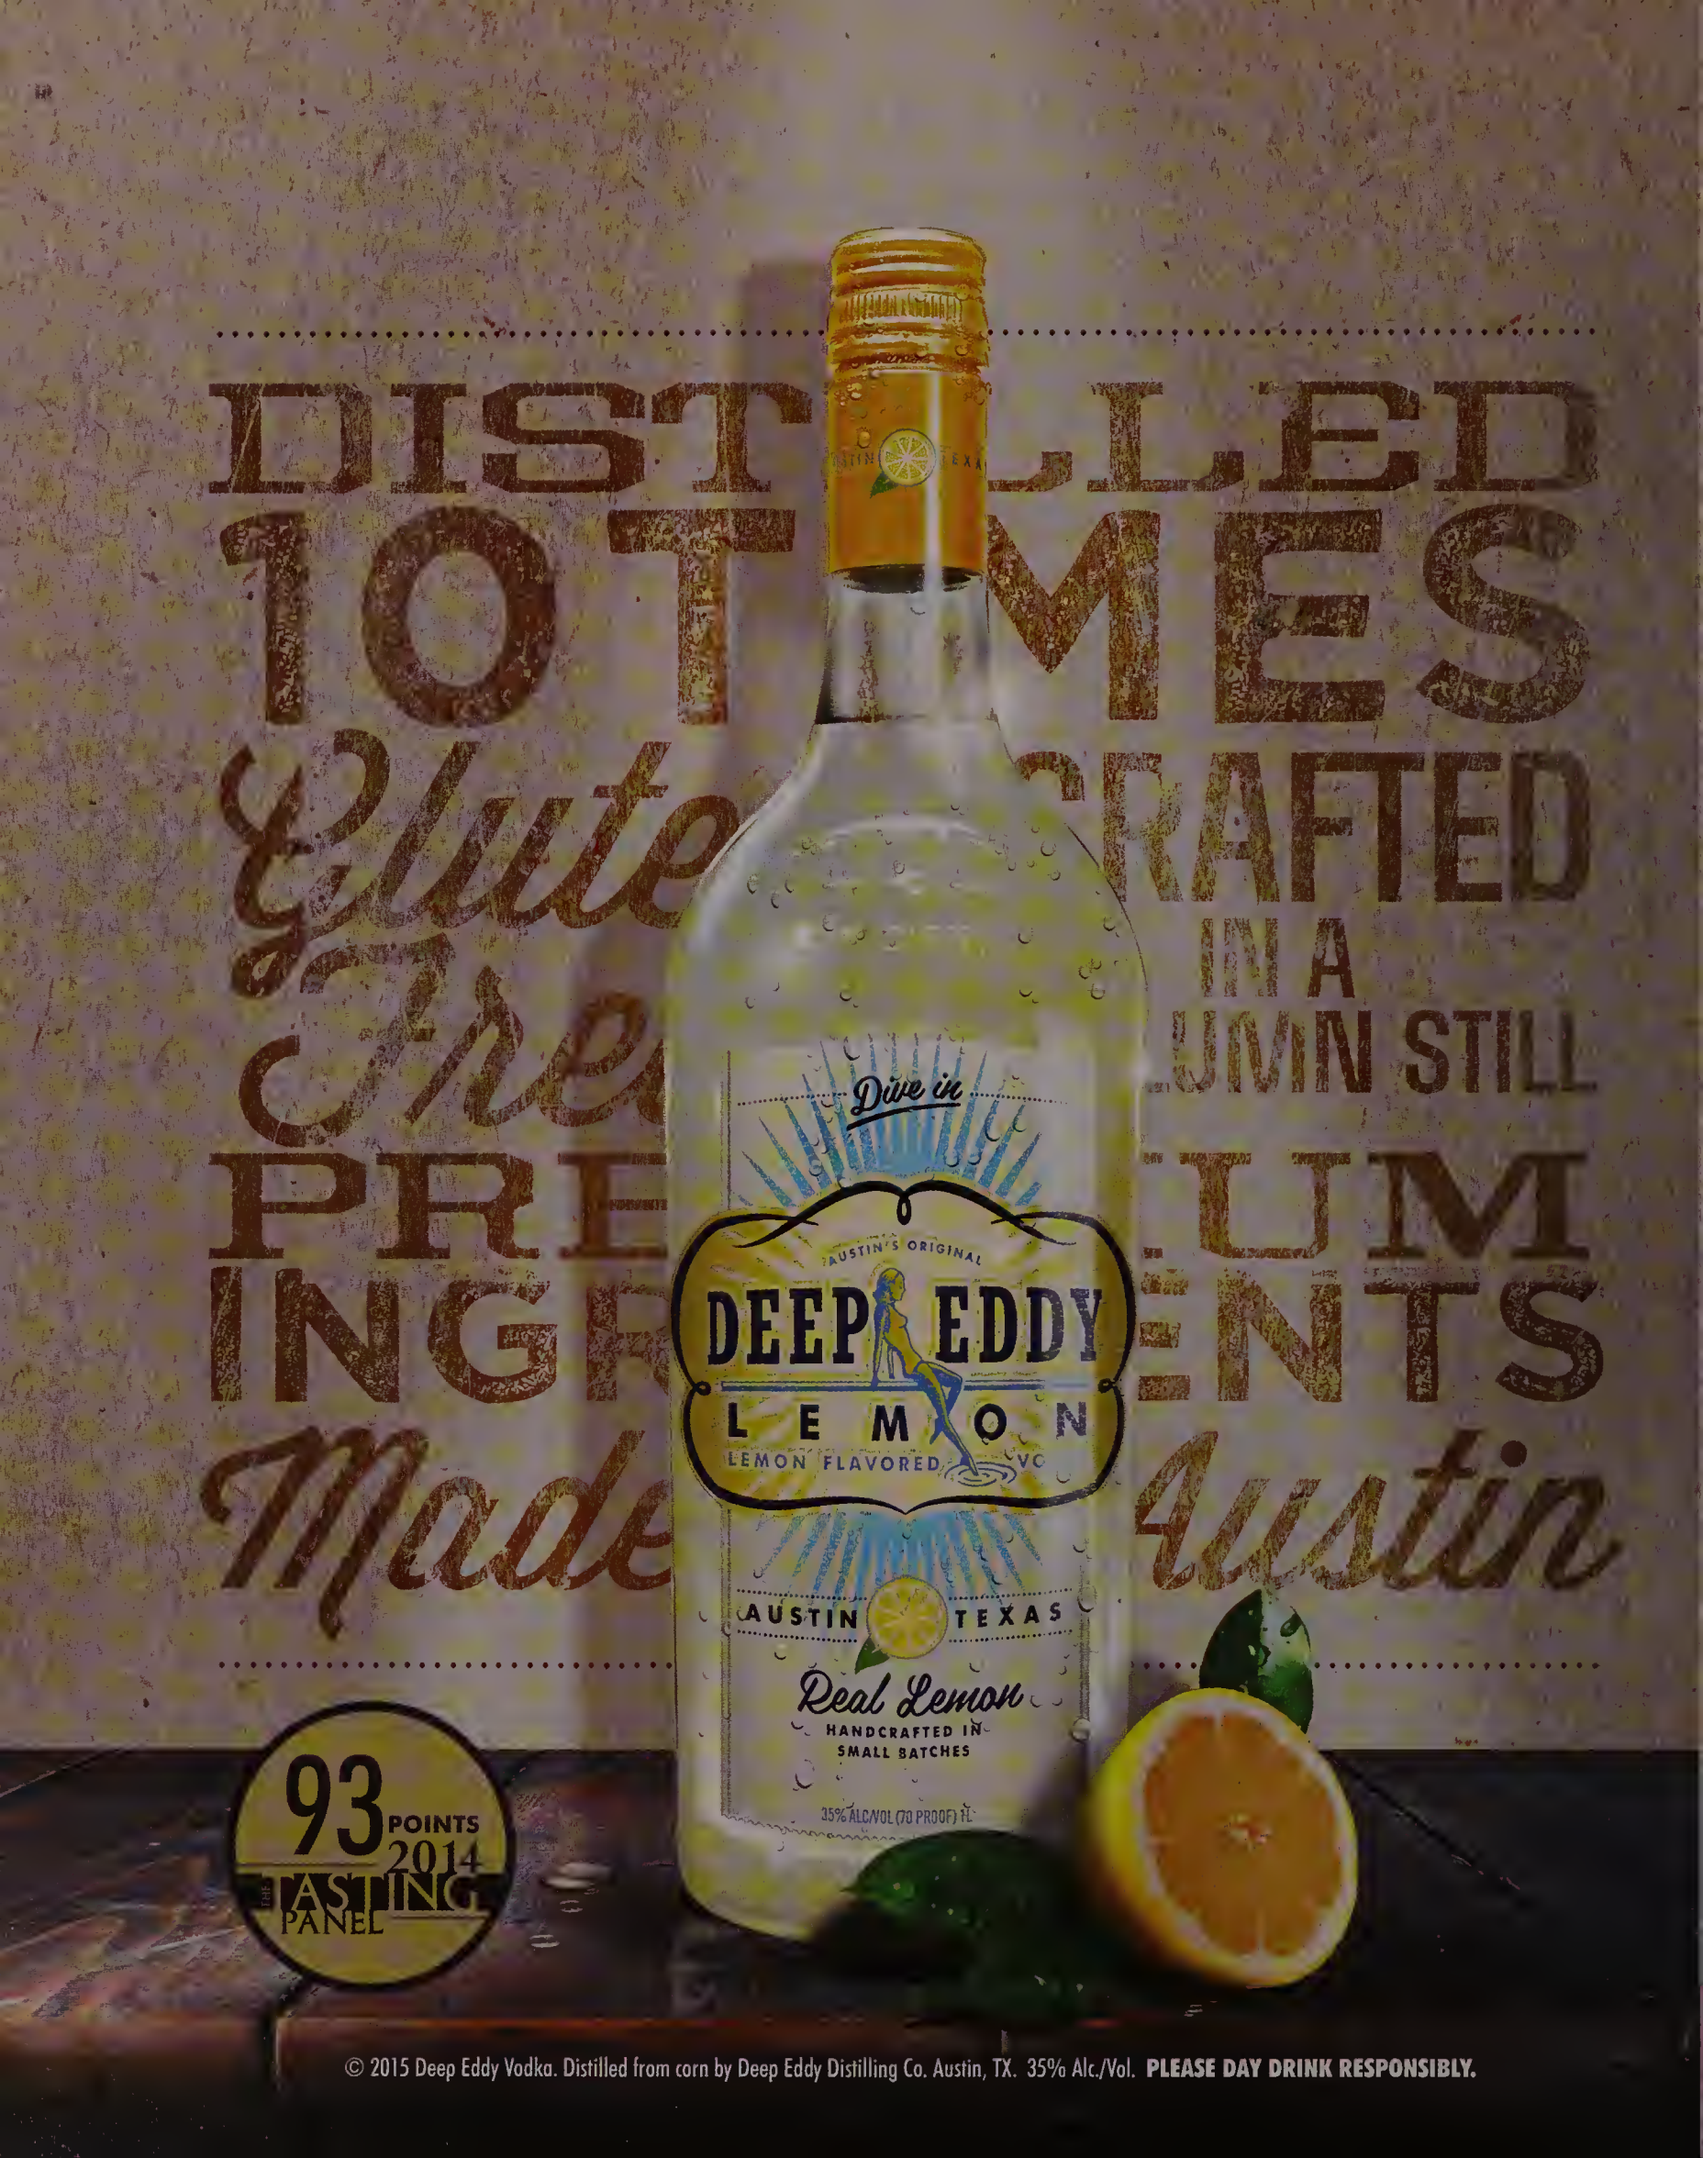
At age 28, Sandoval is old enough to be wily but young ɔugh to have plenty of good years ahead of him. He n three championships with the Giants, so the World ɪies stage is not unfamiliar to him. And fun fact: He's ɔer ambidextrous. We're used to guys who can bat hty or lefty, but Sandoval can throw with either hand. ıy is that relevant? Well, if he loses a step as he enters 30s, maybe our righty third baseman becomes our ɪy first baseman.

ıe Wild Cards

Masterson is the new Lowe, then knuckleballer ɛven Wright could be the new Tim Wakefield, a guy to fill in where he's needed and generally step up with some nasty fluttering junk.

Another intriguing hurler: Mitchell Boggs, who seemed to have a little late-career Kenny Powers thing going on, mullet and all. Released last month, we hope he returns—at least to Pawtucket—if only so we have a slight chance to give second life to all our Wade Boggs apparel. We'll just tape on new numbers. Viva la Chicken Man!

The Delegation from Japan



Here's what we know for sure about the 2015 Red Sox relief corps: Koji Uehara and Junichi Tazawa are awesome. Both of them averaged more than one strikeout per inning last year, along with posting nice sub-3.00 ERAs. And that was on a team that was stink central.

The Final Verdict

OK, so we've got an overhauled pitching staff, a couple of high-priced free-agent sluggers, a homegrown superstar-in-the-making and a handful of veterans with something to prove— Victorino, Dustin Pedroia, Mike Napoli. Assuming that the new "no stepping out of the batter's box" rule doesn't mess with Papi's head, the lineup looks really strong. No, the 2015 Red Sox roster isn't packed with superstars, but then neither was the 2013 team. At this point, we don't know whether we'll be in first place by September, but it looks highly unlikely that we'll find ourselves in last. And if we've learned anything from the past few years, it's that sometimes the abject do-over, the admission of failure, is the quickest path back to success. Don't be surprised if 2015 turns out to be the year of the double boomerang. ◆

AGENDA for 4/8-4/21

Localize

A New York-born fest hits home.

IN BOSTON WE CAN sometimes be a little sensitive when it comes to New York. Perhaps it's because they tend to treat us like an annoying kid sibling. Or because some of our most promising bands tend to ditch us for Brooklyn. In the case of the Aputumpu Music Festival, however, we don't mind taking a cue from BK. That's where the fest started in 2010, aiming to give up-and-coming regulars on the local underground circuit a brighter spotlight. Boston's inaugural edition (which is actually happening in Cambridge) features our 2014 Boston's Best band winner, rockabilly dynamos Tigerman WOAH, on a bill that includes Debo Band, Atlas Soul (pictured) and more. Support some bands we hope stay in town long after they earn national props April 10-11 at the Middle East. / Alexandra Cavallo

FLOAT AN IDEA When Israeli Stage founder Guy Ben-Aharon read Gilad Evron's Ulysses on Bottles, it was love at first line. "I read this play entirely on my phone because I couldn't put it down," says Ben-Aharon, who selected the work for the local company's first fully staged production, co-presented by ArtsEmerson. An Israel Theater Prize winner for best original play, it follows an unlikely pair: Ulysses, an Israeli-Arab teacher who's arrested while attempting to enter Gaza on a raft with surprising cargo—Russian lit—and Saul, an Israeli-Jewish lawyer who takes his case pro bono. SON OF A GUN It took nearly 20 years and a Kickstarter campaign, but Hal Hartley's indie trilogy has finally reached its conclusion in Ned Rifle. The follow-up to 1997's Henry Fool and 2006's Fay Grim tracks Ned, a teen on a mission to kill his father, Henry, as revenge for putting his mother, Fay, in jail. Fans donated nearly $400,000 to bring back the original cast, including Parker Posey as Fay, and franchise newbie Aubrey Plaza plays a woman with shadowy connections to Henry's past. Join the family feud when Ned Rifle makes its local debut at the Brattle on April 10-16, and catch up with screenings of Henry Fool and Fay Grim on April 10-12. / Kate Joseph

Reviews by Brett Michel

Adieu au langage 3-D (Goodbye to Language 3-D) ★★★1/2 Leave it to the crazy old coots of cinema to be the most playful when it comes to brilliant use of 3-D, shot on a shoestring. First, 72-year-old Werner Herzog gave wonderful depth to some of man's earliest two-dimensional drawings in 2010's Cave of Forgotten Dreams; now, 84-year-old legend of the French New Wave Jean-Luc Godard casts his dog, Roxy, and follows her non-linear journeys through numerous seasons and towns. The stray wanders through the lives of the married Josette (Héloïse Godet) and her single lover, Marcus (Richard Chevallier), as they mostly pass through the frame naked, doing mundane things such as farting while doing laundry or taking loud shits, as when Marcus ponders Rodin's The Thinker while sitting on the can. "Words," Josette says. "I don't want to hear about them." This might be Godard's goodbye to language, but he's fully embraced the possibilities of stereoscopic visuals, doing nearly everything he probably shouldn't, making your eyes do gymnastics as bodies are discovered in fountains, Tchaikovsky plays in fits and starts on the soundtrack and Roxy adds to the feces piling up on screen. She's the real star, and her barks suffice. (At Kendall Square.)

Chappie (No Stars) The poster for filmmaker Neill Blomkamp's third film proclaims, "Humanity's last hope isn't human," which demonstrates that I wasn't alone—the marketing people behind Chappie didn't know what the hell this film is about, either. One thing they did get right? The sticker slapped across the scalp of the titular rabbit-eared robot that reads "reject." Blomkamp opens his Johannesburg-set, deeply stupid pastiche of RoboCop, the dumb Short Circuit and the dumber Transcendence with documentary-style talking heads, a la his breakthrough, District 9. Anderson Cooper (playing himself) marvels about the world's first robotic police force, one of whose members is destined to become the sentient Chappie (voiced by District 9's Sharlto Copley). Blomkamp promptly abandons this format, focusing on the inception of this artificially intelligent (umm...) droid. We witness this mechanical progeny of Jar Jar Binks being reared by rap-rave group Die Antwoord. That's right: The movie stars adults who call themselves names like "Ninja," while relegating Sigourney Weaver and Hugh Jackman to supporting roles. "Chappie hate you!" the idiot-bot yells at one point. Not as much as I hate this movie. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

CINDERELLA ★★★ Disney guaranteed audiences would show up for director Kenneth Branagh's live-action remake of their 1950 animated hit by preceding it with a 7-minute mini-sequel to the 2013 animated smash Frozen. But like most follow-ups, this short is a letdown. So, how nice that the main event is such a pleasant surprise. While not a musical retelling (sure to disappoint some Disneyphiles), it's nevertheless a worthy tribute. Starring Downton Abbey's Lily James as the would-be princess, this latest in Disney's recent spate of flesh-and-blood reconfigurations of its animated classics features a standout performance by Cate Blanchett as a more modern interpretation of Cinderella's stepmother, Lady Tremaine. Unsurprisingly, she attempts to stop her stepdaughter from slipping her perfectly fitting foot inside the famed glass slipper and winning the heart of her Prince Charming (Game of Thrones' Richard Madden). What is surprising, however, is that Tremaine is the only woman in the kingdom not to try on the crystalline pump. A cultured woman hoping to provide stability for her family, and she doesn't even try to claim a place as the new queen? This is a fairy tale! (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

DANNY COLLINS ★1/2 "The following is kind of based on a true story," reads the onscreen text at the start of this maudlin mess of a movie, before it's qualified with the words "a little bit." Al Pacino embarrasses himself more than usual as the title character in the directorial debut of screenwriter Dan Fogelman, who pulls double duty as writer of this shameless treacle, which follows his script for Last Vegas, a film that offered crummy roles for no less than Robert De Niro, Michael Douglas, Kevin Kline and Morgan Freeman. Fogelman's nothing if not consistent. Danny Collins is an aging 1970s rocker who wears a girdle while croaking his signature hit, "Hey, Baby Doll," which sounds like a song Neil Diamond might have come up with, but nothing at all like something penned by the inspiration for Collins, British folk singer Steve Tilston. Like Collins, though, Tilston did discover a handwritten fan letter from John Lennon nearly 40 years after it was sent, but it's here that reality ends and Fogelman's schmaltzy fiction begins, prompting Collins to "embark on a heartfelt journey," according to the press notes. Don't believe it. Not even a little bit. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

THE DIVERGENT SERIES: INSURGENT ★★ This dystopian bore based on the middle installment of Veronica Roth's young adult novels once again stars Shailene Woodley as Katniss...err, Tris, and Theo James as, um, Four, placing them in the ruins of what had been Chicago. Tris, her brother Caleb (Ansel Elgort) and Four have been hiding from Jeanine (Kate Winslet), but when the villain's trigger-happy troops find them, the trio manage to escape on a speeding train, with Four leaping in front of it, like Superman. And why not? Even though the Divergent series has been packaged as a progressive girl-power showcase, this film backpedals on muscular feminism as it shifts the action focus onto Four, who saves Tris more than once. We discover that Tris' mother died in the previous movie not only protecting her daughter, but also trying to keep a totemic LED-bedazzled box (appearing nowhere in the novel) from falling into Jeanine's hands—which it does, anyway. Caleb helpfully tells Tris (and confused readers of the book) that it contains a Very Important Message from the Founders—which can only be accessed via Tris and her superb virtual reality video game skills. Or something. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

FOCUS ★★1/2 This love story between two professional liars and cheats might leave you feeling conned, especially after such a promising first half. Will Smith brings a lot of charm to his role of master thief Nicky, but it's Margot Robbie as Jess, his new protege, who steals the movie. Co-writers and co-directors Glenn Ficarra and John Requa (I Love You Phillip Morris) lay most of their cards out when they place Nicky in a car with Jess as Noel Harrison sings "The Windmills of Your Mind" on the radio. This Oscar-winning song was the theme of 1968's The Thomas Crown Affair—and Ficarra and Requa wish their movie could be half as entertaining as the Boston-set heist classic. But for a while, it is. Nicky and Jess meet-cute in New York, and their week-long con games/love affair in New Orleans lead up to the Super Bowl. A tension-filled sequence at the big game finds the two in an escalating gambling match with B.D. Wong's Liyuan, and the payoff is huge. But then, abruptly, the words "Three years later..." appear onscreen, and you feel like your pocket's been picked. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

FURIOUS 7 ★★★ Before the title has even appeared onscreen in the seventh installment of The Fast and the Furious franchise, Jason Statham's Deckard Shaw has single-handedly destroyed much of a London hospital in his quest for vengeance against the people responsible for gravely injuring his little brother, Fast & Furious 6's baddie. His targets? The close-knit team of Dominic Toretto (Vin Diesel), who's first seen involving himself in a "Race War," which is more innocent than it sounds (this isn't Get Hard, people). Returning for one final ride is the late Paul Walker as Brian O'Conner. Walker, who died in an unrelated car wreck during production, is nevertheless introduced behind the wheel...of a minivan. Brian's now a dedicated dad, fitting with the series' sentimental focus on "family." Watching his son hurl toy cars, he tells the boy, "Cars don't fly." Except when they do. Whether dropped from planes, jumping off mountains or driven between two skyscrapers, Furious 7's exotic vehicles spend much of their time airborne. Switching lanes from horror to action, director James Wan (Saw, Insidious and The Conjuring) gets up to speed quickly, hardly letting off the gas as he steers Walker toward a graceful ride into the sunset. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

GET HARD ★1/2 This Will Ferrell and Kevin Hart vehicle has taken a lot of knocks for its perceived racism and homophobia, but what's most offensive is how few jokes land, given what should have been a slam-dunk. Put these two side-by-side in the frame together, and Ferrell's oversized doughiness and Hart's diminutive feistiness could surpass Ferrell's delightful pairing with Mark Wahlberg in The Other Guys, a farce that knew what to do with its leads. That 2010 picture was directed by Ferrell's longtime comedy partner, Adam McKay, a man who knows how to frame a scene. Alas, McKay steps into a producing role here, allowing co-writer Etan Cohen (screenwriter behind 2006's Idiocracy and 2008's Tropic Thunder) to take the director's chair, and the first-timer fails to use the mismatched physiques of his two performers to any real advantage. Ferrell plays a wrongfully convicted millionaire investment banker who enlists the man who washes his car (Hart) to help him prepare for life behind bars, presuming that the black man must have done time. Many flaccid prison rape jokes follow, and although Cohen does have Ferrell bench-press Hart like a barbell, it's light lifting in a leaden satire. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Kingsman: The Secret Service ★★★ Matthew Vaughn reinvigorated Marvel Comics' X-Men for the big screen in 2011's X-Men: First Class, a period piece where he demonstrated an affinity for the swinging '60s, in addition to the command of action filmmaking and editing he'd displayed in 2010's Kick-Ass, his violent, entertaining deconstruction of the modern superhero movie, based on writer Mark Millar's comic book series. Now, Vaughn and regular collaborator Jane Goldman have freely adapted another Millar comic book, 2012's The Secret Service. Although set in the present, this affectionately winking, post-modern take on spy films aims squarely at the James Bond franchise, specifically the 1970s movies, with Oscar winner Colin Firth tapping into his inner Roger Moore as gentleman spy Harry Hart. He recruits "Eggsy" (newcomer Taron Egerton), who was Olympic material before he dropped out of the Royal Marines and into a life of petty crime. "The suit is the modern gentleman's armor," Hart tells the lad, and he's not kidding—the designer suits Eggsy's outfitted with are as bullet-proof as his ammunition-firing umbrella, and they'll be needed for all the over-the-top action and carnage ahead. If Bond's upper lip has grown too stiff for you, Eggsy's new breed of spy is bound to raise a few eyebrows. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Second Best Exotic Marigold Hotel ★★ Director John Madden won't be winning any Oscars for this follow-up to his 2011 hit, The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel. However, he and his screenwriter, Ol Parker, should be given credit for their honesty—their sequel certainly is the second best in this series. Without a novel to work from (the first film was based on Deborah Moggach's These Foolish Things), Parker builds his script around the goodwill that audiences have for these characters. However, the absence of Tom Wilkinson's Graham is deeply felt, and bulking up the supporting roles of returning cast members—Ronald Pickup and Diana Hardcastle as Norman and Carol, Celia Imrie as Madge—can't make up for this hole, especially when they're provided with sitcom-style plots. MVP Maggie Smith provides the film's backbone as Muriel; as the newly installed co-manager of the hotel, alongside Dev Patel's Sonny, she's the glue that holds everything together, even if few of the pieces quite fit. Judi Dench and Bill Nighy also bring their immeasurable charms back to their roles of Evelyn and Douglas, but new hotel guests Guy (Richard Gere) and Lavinia (Tamsin Greig) feel like exactly what this film is: filler. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Song of the Sea ★★★★ You know those remarkably stylized animated end credits that are a Pixar specialty? The sequences that appear to be handcrafted, unlike the hyper-realistic computer-generated wonders that preceded them? If you're lucky enough to have seen director Tomm Moore's Academy Award-nominated The Secret of Kells, then you're aware that entire feature films can be hand-animated in a similar style. Now Moore is back, five years later, with his latest Oscar-nominated animated masterpiece. Based on the Irish legend of the selkies—seals that transform into humans while on land—Song of the Sea tells the tale of 6-year-old seal-child Saoirse. She and older brother Ben escape their grandmother's house in the city to return to their father and dog in their lighthouse home by the sea. Pursued by an owl witch, they discover a world of magic and uncover untold secrets of their past. Featuring the voices of Brendan Gleeson and Fionnula Flanagan, this charming picture offers a wonderful alternative to computer-animated fare, with music by composer Bruno Coulais (Coraline) and Irish band Kila that only adds to the enchantment. (At West Newton.)

Woman in Gold ★★ While the titular Gustav Klimt painting, referred to as "the Mona Lisa of Austria," is a masterpiece, director Simon Curtis' film about an octogenarian woman's fight to reclaim the famous portrait of her aunt is anything but. The maudlin script by first-time screenwriter Alexi Kaye Campbell doesn't do any favors for Helen Mirren or Ryan Reynolds, the wildly mismatched actors who portray the elderly Jewish woman, Maria Altmann, and her inexperienced young lawyer, Randy Schoenberg, as they fight the Austrian establishment to reclaim the artwork that Nazis stole from her Viennese family. A flashback structure finds Altmann portrayed in her younger years by a surprisingly credible Mirren stand-in, Orphan Black star Tatiana Maslany, but her flight to America alongside her husband (Max Irons) is presented in a hackneyed thriller fashion that cheapens

the power of the story, which isn't helped by the paint-by-numbers screenplay that puts as much emphasis on Schoenberg's family as it does Altmann's. True, his grandfather was a famed Austrian composer whose family also fled the Nazis, but Schoenberg's domestic and workplace dramas have little of the resonance of Altmann's larger story. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

QUIET RIOT

José González was once best known for his popular YouTube covers of Joy Division and the Knife, but the Swedish indie folk artist has since come into his own minimalist sound. The son of Argentinian refugees who relocated to a Swedish suburb, González was raised on Latin American folk, pop and Spanish flamenco. But his long-awaited, self-produced Vestiges & Claws also recalls Simon & Garfunkel. Released in February, González's first album in seven years finds him contemplating human existence, shrouding some heavy questions in gentle guitar melodies. He'll be killing the crowd softly with his songs at the Paradise Rock Club on April 11. / Kyle Grace Mills

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

A HOME RUN Baseball season will officially be in full swing when the Concord Museum's The Art of Baseball steps up to the plate on April 17. With eclectic folk art (think weathervanes and quilts) and fine art from the likes of Robert Rauschenberg and William Zorach, the exhibit offers a multimedia celebration of America's pastime. View items on loan from the National Baseball Hall of Fame, like Ted Williams' 1946 glove and Carl Yastrzemski's 1981 cap, and don't miss an all-star lineup of activities, including a sports memorabilia appraisal and a 19th-century-style game. Root for the home team through Sept. 20. / Hannah Landers

RUN FOR IT

Whether your idea of a workout involves one mile or more than 26, ultra-marathoner Christopher McDougall's new book Natural Born Heroes will inspire you to hit the ground running. The best-selling author uses a daring World War II plot hatched on the island of Crete as the starting point for an exploration of athletic feats past and present. And his book signing event goes the extra mile, including a fun run with the author, along with demos on knife throwing, Parkour, foraging and other badass survival tactics. Lace up with McDougall on April 18, when he comes to Old South Church. / Grace Rasmus

IMPROPER Sightings!

ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS!
WE'RE OFFERING THE LATEST IN PONCHO COUTURE TO THE IMPROPER READER WHO SNAPS A PIC AT THE WATER-SPLASHING FESTIVAL IN CHINA ON APRIL 13–15.

FOR MORE SIGHTINGS PHOTOS, VISIT IMPROPER.COM.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip.

Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy or, better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you went. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Steve and Kathy Chubb and Dorothy and Kevin Andrews hunted down our Spring Fashion issue (and showed off their choice chapeaus) while exploring Ayers Rock in the Australian Outback.

Juan Lucero put us on the map at the Middle of the World monument in Quito, Ecuador.

Robin Mersereau and Hunter Kingsman got us into pyramid schemes in Egypt.

Michael Eastwell and Sean and Geoff Girdler had a need for speed (reading) in Dorset, England.

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call—a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre-and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

BOS VEGAS...

What happens at the Four Seasons stays at the Four Seasons, which is a cagey way of saying that the fifth annual Casino Night to raise money for the Lenny Zakim Fund was so much fun the memory's a bit fuzzy.

The ballroom was transformed into a mini Monte Carlo, and seen pushing chips around the gaming tables were the likes of co-chair Josh Zakim, new mom Amy Beklin Mofenson and her brewer husband, Jay, blue-blooded balabusta Julie Hume Gordon, the smoking hot Sabra Katz, film producer Sam Slater and the irresistible Jessica, bespectacled hipster Matt Fox, bootlegger Gary Park and his other half, Cerissa, Weston party pair Kristie and Tom Zaccagnino, hedge fund hottie Emily Leventhal, human teddy bear Tito Jackson, brunette bombshell Pamela Vargas, the smoldering Aisha Al Riyami, the absurdly handsome Tyler Summers, blond beauty Ashley Karger and the adoring Wes, stunning young thing Joanna Humphrey Flynn and the adoring Bryan, nutty Newtonians Diana and Alex Peselman, scratch golfer Jake Rosenberg, whirling dervish David Donnelly (who wound up dancing on a table), tall drink of water Sonny Saggese and pretty much every other high roller in Boston.

The blackjack tables were packed, the dice were hot, and the roulette wheels kept spinning into the wee hours, all to raise money for local grass-roots organizations.

Summing the evening up: One woman whose pile of chips had swelled to $500,000 said, "Let's take this to Foxwoods."

PUTTING THE "ART" IN PARTY...

The Great White Way came to the Park Plaza Castle when the American Repertory Theater hosted its ultra-glittery gala, Boundless.

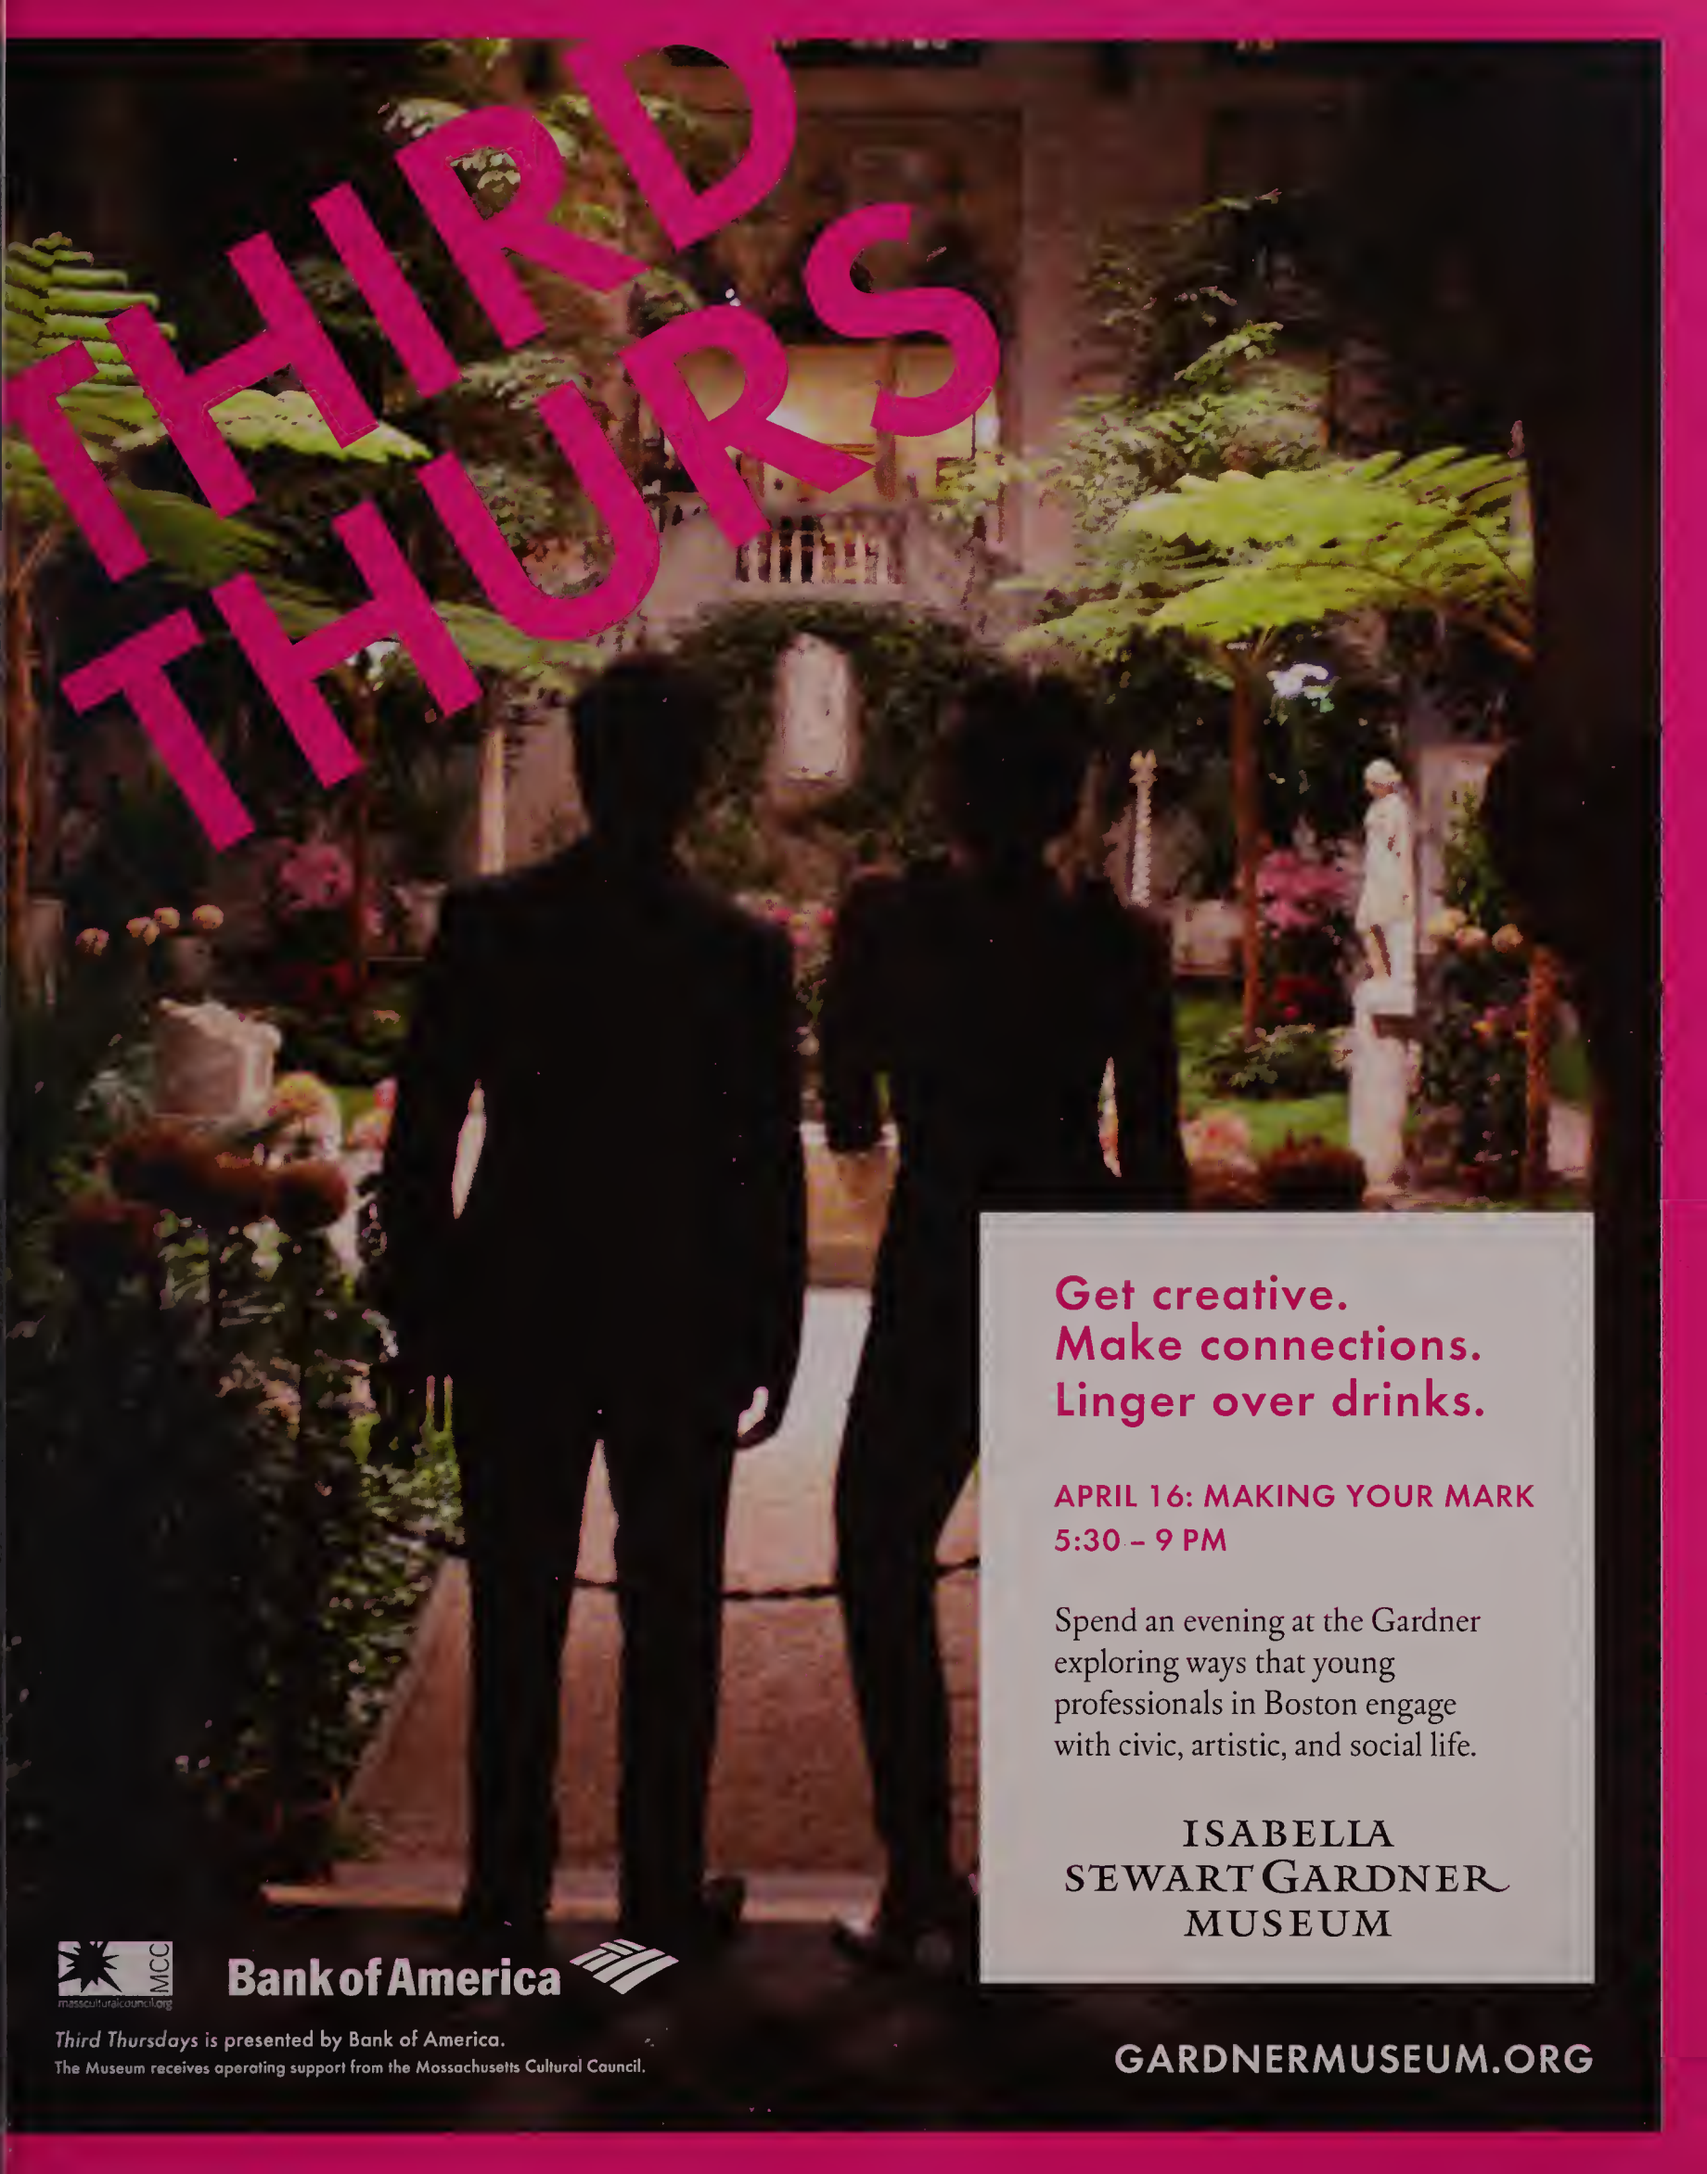
The evening began with a cocktail reception and continued with dinner punctuated by entertainment from Broadway star Gavin Creel and Grammy-nominated songstress Sara Bareilles, who brought the house down. Present and accounted for: the evening's honoree, Rebecca Gold Milikowsky, theater deity Diane Paulus, major arts patrons Paul and Katie Buttenwieser, singer-songwriter Sally Taylor and her main squeeze, Dean Bragonier, Boston booster Linda Pizzuti Henry and her other half, John, cable gazillionaire Amos Hostetter and the flawless Barbara, brunette beauty Barbara Jordan, ambassador/academic/heiress Swanee Hunt, bestselling author Alice Hoffman, Broadway producer Wendy Federman, the aptly named Candy Gold, Cantabrigian power pair Jonathan and Maggie Seelig, uber-benefactors Ann and Graham Gund, wine merchant TJ Douglas and his blond beauty, Hadley, South End party pair Davin Wedel and David Paul, theatrical impresario Guy Ben-Aharon, and so on and so forth.

The food was better than Sardi's, the performances worthy of a Tony, and when all was said and done, the party raised more than $1 million.

Meanwhile, the evening's most topical remark came from the podium, when one of the speakers thanked everyone for braving "50 shades of gray snow to be here this evening."

LIPS THAT TOUCH BREAD...



Proving what a premium Bostonians put on education, The Point Foundation's Cornerstone Society held its eighth annual fundraiser at the Mandarin Oriental and raised more money than any of the other 12 cities nationwide where the L.A.-based charity holds events.

Providing scholarships to promising LGBT youth, the organization attracts gay and lesbian A-listers and their allies, among them: co-chairs Ashley Lucas and Peter Kapinos, the devilishly clever John Wolfarth and his dashing other half, Kevin Powers, the follicularly fortunate Stephen Martyak, cute-as-a-button couple Adam and Michael Oliveri, the devastatingly handsome David Zimmerman, tireless do-gooder Nan Dumas, editor extraordinaire Jim Lopata, art collector Allison Salke, opinionated aesthete Matthew Erikson, advertising executive Tom Grimshaw, silver fox Joe Zibrak, design avatar Dean Poritzky and equally polished others.

Two current Point Scholars—MIT student Samir Luther and BC Law's Katie Kendall—shared their stories, choking up the crowd. But lest it sound maudlin, one guest summed up the party by saying, "I call this event the Great Boston Husband Hunt."

Meanwhile, the evening's most stereotypical comment, overheard in line for the buffet: "Carbs? Ew." ◆

THE GOOD LIFE

FOR OUR LUXURY ISSUE, WE DECIDED to go on a treasure hunt—not for gold coins or schmancy bling, but for the more personal prized possessions of some fascinating locals. Some of these collectors are just starting out; others have been at it for decades. (One has a warehouse worth of finds.) Some of their caches represent great monetary value; others, not so much. But each reflects the time and taste of its owner and offers a lens into a life, from the fountain pens of a calligrapher to a pastry chef's tiny spoons to the rare maps of cartography connoisseur and philanthropist Norman Leventhal, who was the first subject to agree to participate in this story but passed away before we went to press. Photographer Adam DeTour captures their collections in a feature that gives some credence to Ruskin's old epigram: "Tell me what you like, and I'll tell you what you are."

Elsewhere, Jonathan Soroff interviews our scene-stealing cover subject, BU alum Hong Chau, Lydia Santangelo offers a spread of black-and-white fashions that are anything but basic, and master of wine Sandy Block pops some pink Champagne. Cheers.

KIMONO FABRIC FINDS A STYLISH SECOND LIFE. ›››

Pocket Full of Promise

THE PHRASE "MADE IN MASSACHUSETTS" is one we hear too infrequently, and that's one reason Faburiq caught our attention. The other is the dazzlingly beautiful pocket squares and scarves produced by this men's accessories startup founded by Chestnut Hill resident Aruña Chong Quiroga, who's honoring two rich textile traditions—from Japan and Lowell—in one fell swoop.

The idea for Faburiq started to percolate several years ago, when the Malaysia native was visiting a quaint fabric store in Japan with her husband, Alejandro (who comes by his Beau Brummel credentials honestly as the son of famously dapper Channel 5 newsman Jorge Quiroga). "He found a piece of material and asked me to make something for him with it," recalls Chong Quiroga, who is now making accessories for a wider clientele, transforming Japanese heritage and vintage kimono fabrics into pocket squares and scarves available at faburiq.com, Newton's Mr. Sid and Jamaica Plain's Caramelo Clothing, all produced in a factory in Lowell. "I was always aware that it was a textile town with great history," she explains, "and I'm happy to help that continue."

With fewer men wearing ties to the office, the pocket square has become an au courant way for stylish guys to make a fashion statement—both GQ and The Wall Street Journal named the pocket square "men's accessory of the year" in 2014. "It just completes an outfit and gives it a certain polish," Chong Quiroga says. "And it's so easy."

But the beauty lies in the materials themselves. Chong Quiroga sources a variety of silks—such as dead stock meisen (ikat), shibori (tie-dye) and omeshi (crepe)—in brilliant colors and patterns, as well as the sturdier kasuri cotton, which tends to come in blue and white hues. The resulting accessories are finished with hand-rolled silk edges or baby hems by a group of Cambodian women in Lowell. "In Cambodia, they still wear traditional clothing with a lot of beading and fine sewing," Chong Quiroga explains. "Hand sewing is part of their culture." And because they use every inch of the fabric bolt, there's minimal waste and the guarantee of a limited edition—once a bolt is used, that exact fabric is gone. "I'm very passionate about the way I consume," she concludes. "It's a means of repurposing and breathing new life into fabrics that would otherwise have gone unworn and forgotten."/ Jonathan Soroff

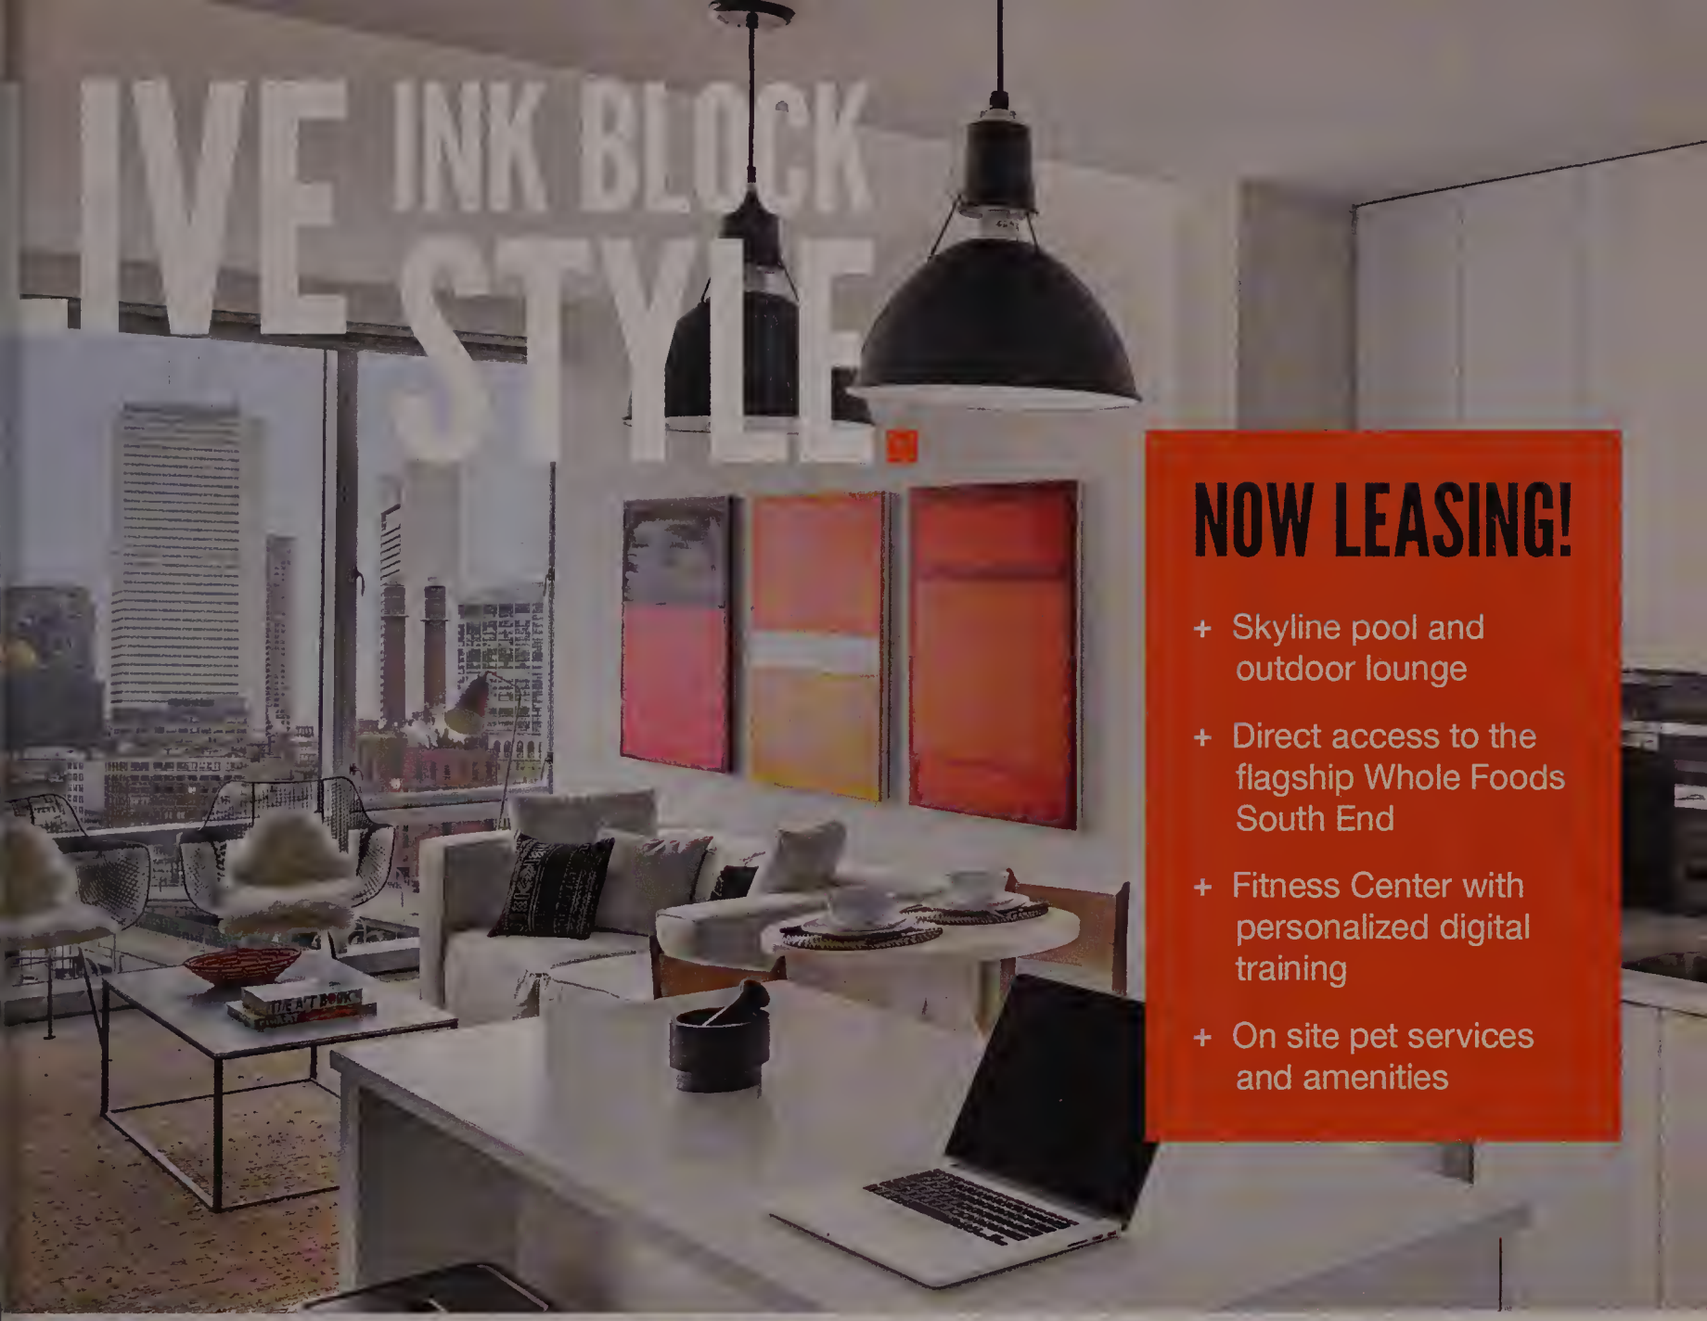
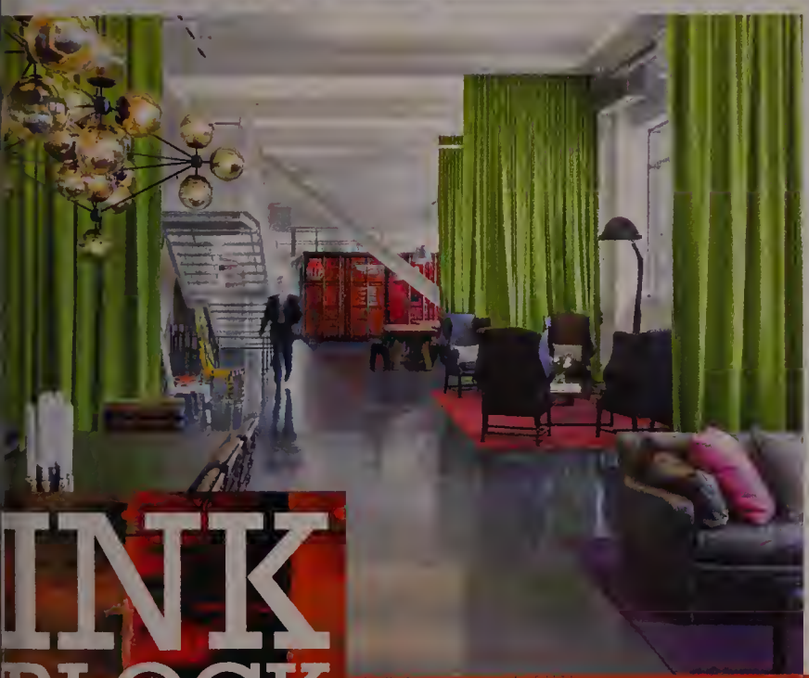
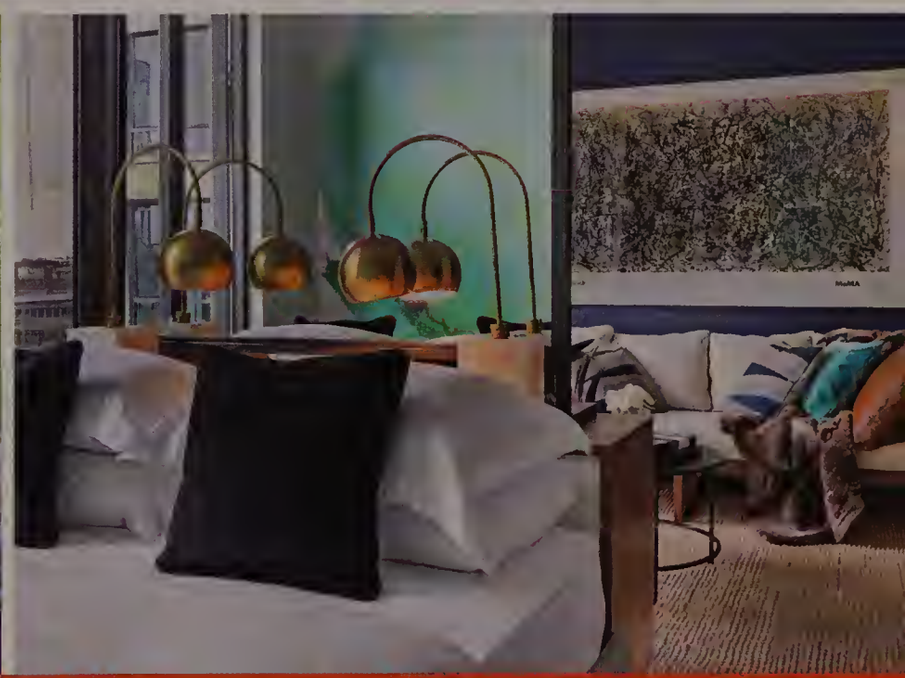
JAPANESE HAPPA ($65)
"The fabric was woven in the 1970s in a very unique colorway, in a time before computer-generated patterns."



INDIGO AND WHITE ($45)
"The fabric was originally intended to make men's summer kimonos. The indigo, almost black color is a common hue in cotton kimono fabrics."

VARIANTS OF BLUE ($45)
"This is a more contemporary Japanese design made with lightweight kimono cotton. The rich blues and indigo colors of this fabric allow plenty of versatility."





YELLOW KIMONO ($65)
"This pocket square with stencil-like drawing is made from tsumugi silk. Tsumugi originated with farmers who made use of cocoons left over after they sold their best silk."

Upgrade: Fine Art for Your Arm

Local art lovers know Renzo Piano from his work on the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum and the Harvard Art Museums. Now the Italian starchitect's latest commission—the new Whitney Museum of American Art—is set to debut on May 1, but Bostonians won't have to trek to NYC to see a smaller-scale version of sorts. Designed by Max Mara and the Renzo Piano Building Workshop, the Whitney Bag ($1,150–$1,750) hits the brand's Newbury Street outpost in early May and recalls the building's structural details, down to leather ribbing that echoes the steel-beamed exterior. Available in black, Bordeaux, tobacco and a limited-edition blue-gray that mimics the museum facade's metallic hue, it's arty arm candy. / Jacqueline Houton

TICKLED PINK

Rosé may compose a tiny segment of the overall wine market, but it's been the fastest growing category during the recent boom in Champagne sales. Generally created by adding pinot noir (about 15 percent) to the divine bubbly, pink Champagne carries an aura of luxury, festivity and exclusivity—the complicated production means a premium price. These three picks more than justify the upcharge and stand out as exemplars of the style. / Sandy Block

VEUVE CLICQUOT BRUT ROSÉ
The mighty Veuve's medium orange- and pink-colored Champagne is a stronger, more intense rosé with an unusually high percentage of reserve wines in the blend. Piercingly dry and a bit smoky, with undertones of strawberry, sea salt and chalky flavors, it is savory and lingers on the palate. A layered, beautifully structured, crisp Champagne, it will work wonders with meaty, fleshier fish preparations, such as roasted monkfish, or even lobster. Its tart fruit also matches nicely with cured meats.
$70, The Urbon Grope

LAURENT-PERRIER CUVÉE BRUT ROSÉ
Salmon colored with a touch of orange, this is a superb wine bottled in an antique bottle, a rosé with a subtle creamy melange of berries, orange marmalade and earthy flavors. Toasty, herb-scented and fragrant with plum and red currants, it has a bone-dry core of acidity that balances the lush fruit. This wine is strong enough to complement a dish like roast duck with a cherry glaze, and it would also be delightful after dinner with mild cheeses and unsweetened berries.
$96, BRIX Wine Shop

LANSON BRUT ROSÉ
A little-known Champagne house that is on the upswing in quality, Lanson makes a pale, light-colored rosé with fragrant floral scents and a whiff of baked cherry pie. Crisp and subtle, with tart red fruit, this is a Champagne of finesse and minerality. Think delicate, sparkling pinot noir with an unmistakable goût de terroir. Beautifully balanced between the red fruit, citrus and sourdough bread notes, it's an ideal match for subtly flavored, gently textured fish preparations, such as Dover sole.
$60, Bouer Wine & Spirits

BABBO'S A GO

MARIO BATALI'S LONG-AWAITED VENTURE FINDS A HOME.

Babbo Pizzeria e Enoteca
11 Fan Pier Blvd., Boston
(617-421-4466)
bobbopizzeria.com

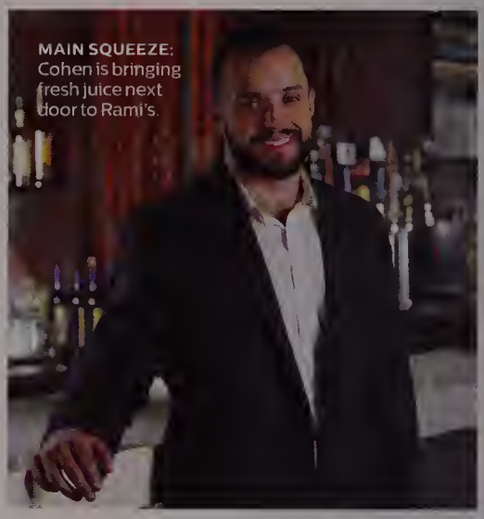
IT TOOK A LITTLE EXTRA TIME TO FIND THE location. And it took a little extra time to finish the construction. But all that extra time has paid off in the eyes of Mario LaPosta as he takes the reins as executive chef of Mario Batali's Babbo Pizzeria e Enoteca at Fan Pier.

"This is such an awesome location that I would do it all over again," he raves. "It's right on the water."

The original Fort Point location fell through nearly two years ago, and delays from the winter's historic snow added to the wait. But that just meant Batali and partners Joe and Lidia Bastianich had a little longer to find the perfect ingredients for their first Boston restaurant after decades of operating in New York, L.A., Las Vegas and many other cities. (They're reportedly already planning their second Boston restaurant, an Eataly in the Prudential.)

Babbo's design is by turns rustic and industrial, with porcelain floors, oak tables and chairs, exposed pipes and lights hanging from a black ceiling in a space that seats 160 (which will jump to 180 when the outdoor patio opens). The main marble-topped bar runs nearly the length of the interior with stools to seat dozens of patrons, who'll find USB chargers hidden below the bar. There's also a bar by the pizza oven and another at the antipasto kitchen, allowing diners to keep an eye on LaPosta and his crew.

"I think we want that casual but elegant atmosphere, and the menu really fits with that," LaPosta says. "There's so many parts to it."



The menu includes varied Italian offerings, but LaPosta says finding the highlight is as simple as glancing at part of the restaurant's name: Pizzeria. The Neapolitan-style pies will be cooked in the 1,000-degree oven at the heart of the pizza bar, with classics like the Margherita cooking alongside favorites such as the goat cheese pizza topped with truffle honey and pistachios, which LaPosta says is perfect as an appetizer, an entree or dessert. But pizza-phobes will find plenty of options in a menu that's broken down into 10 sections, from a fritti selection of Italian street foods such as mozzarella in carozza to an extensive lineup of pastas such as taccozzette with sausage and broccoli rabe. For dessert, there's gelato that general manager Caroline Conrad calls one of a kind.

And the theme spreads to an all-Italian wine list that's starting with 150 bottles but will soon be up to 700 with picks from all 20 regions of the country. Aside from providing diners with sustenance, there's a second benefit to all that wine.

"Our decor is just wine," Conrad says. "What we feature on the walls is not art, but wine labels. That's what we do."

CHICKPEAS TO CHIA SEEDS

MAIN SQUEEZE: Cohen is bringing fresh juice next door to Rami's.

FAMED FOR ITS FALAFEL, RAMI'S WILL celebrate 25 years in Brookline's Coolidge Corner on May 31. But Rami's owner Haim Cohen (son of the eponymous Rami) isn't content to simply celebrate the occasion. He plans to open Pure Cold Press, a juice-focused vegetarian restaurant, next door. It will serve three meals a day, ranging from buckwheat pancakes and porridge for breakfast to a lunch and dinner menu that will include sandwiches such as smoked egg salad with kimchee on ciabatta, a full salad bar with six "base options" such as kale and arugula, stews and soups, chia and acai bowls, and, of course, organic juices. At least 10 cold-pressed juices and nut milks will be available, with enhancements such as ginger or turmeric "booster shots." Raw snacks and healthy desserts will round out the seasonal menu, which is expected to change weekly.

That menu is all kosher, with artisanal breads trucked in from a special Connecticut bakery and operating hours that accommodate the Jewish Sabbath (it's closed from 3 pm Friday through Saturday). Cohen describes the decor, which is heavy on recycled materials, as "a modern, cool-school take on cafeteria" style. With Pure Cold Press slated to open in early May, he's already talking about hopes to expand the concept. "Let's see how the first one does," he says confidently.

PLAY WITH FIRE...

Speaking of expansion, the team behind the successful FIRE + iCE—Jim Miller and Rafael Barbosa—has devised a new take on its concept. Tucked under the Berkeley Street FIRE + iCE, underFire is positioned as a "neighborhood chill lounge." The menu's "build-a-burger" feature echoes the FIRE + iCE you-pick-the-ingredients theme, with toppings and sauces ranging from fried eggs to Sriracha mayo. And there's the requisite extensive selection of cocktails and craft beers, which can be savored at an elegant tigerwood bar under state-of-the-art lighting.

Q&A

HE'S ON A KROLL

His recent characters include "The Douche" and a spin instructor with IBS, but funnyman Nick Kroll gets serious in his latest role as a failed entrepreneur who moves back in with his sister in Adult Beginners. Helmed by Boston producers Paul Bernon, David Bernon and Sam Slater, the dramedy premieres on April 22 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre, where Kroll will be on hand for a post-screening Q&A. / Meghon Kovonough

WHAT IS YOUR FAVORITE PART OF THE FILM? What I really like about it is that obviously it's called Adult Beginners, and it really is about the fact that people I think feel...like adults but also still feel like kids in a lot of ways. But it's really the story of brothers and sisters.... I've talked to people who have been like "I've got to call my sister," or "I'm going to call my brother," after watching it, which I really love to hear.

COULD YOU RELATE TO THE FEELING OF BEING AN ADULT BEGINNER? Oh, for sure.... By the time my dad was my age, he had four kids and had started a business, and I could barely get a printer cartridge for my home computer.

WHAT DID YOU ENJOY ABOUT THIS MORE DRAMATIC ROLE? Being able to just play something as you would play it without having to worry about having a joke at the end every moment was cool.... But the truth is that I think life is filled with funny moments and sad moments, and so I think we were just trying to capture that—that funny things can happen in sad moments and sad things or traumatic things can happen in funny moments. Those things are inextricably tied together.

YOU HAVE PLAYED SO MANY CHARACTERS OVER THE YEARS—DO YOU HAVE A FAVORITE? Well, on my show, Kroll Show, which just also wrapped up after three seasons, I played Larry Bird, obviously a Boston god, which I kind of loved playing. It was a really weird character for me because in my mind, Larry Bird was such a quiet guy, didn't like people, didn't like to overly socialize.... This past season we did a version of Cheers called Chairs, and he was the bartender. It was him and Bill Walton, played by Seth Rogen, and my friend Jon Daly played Kelsey Grammer, and [there was] the frozen head of Ted Williams. It was a very, very Boston-centric sketch.

THE TENOR OF MURDER

A LOCAL AUTHOR OFFERS AN OPERATIC MYSTERY SET IN 18TH-CENTURY VIENNA

THE FIGARO MURDERS* by Laura Lebow
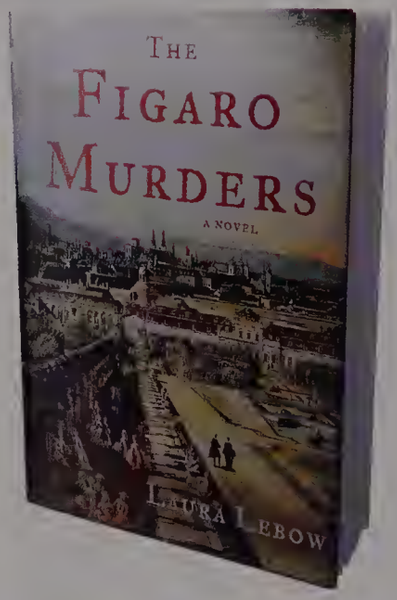
Published by Minotaur Books, 336 pages, $25

Cambridge opera lover Laura Lebow's debut novel transports us to 1786 Vienna, where Lorenzo Da Ponte is frantically busy as Mozart's librettist. But he's pulled away from his work by his barber, Vogel, who asks for help in finding his birth mother while being carted off to debtor's prison. This search takes Lorenzo to the nobleman Gabler's house, crammed with aristocratic intrigue. There, he meets Gabler's cheeky young protege, Florian, who's full of mischievous jokes and prone to secretive activities we hope to see more of.



But the next day, Florian is murdered—and Lorenzo initially becomes a suspect. He's given a choice: Solve the mystery, or hang for the crime himself. As a cover for his investigation, he takes a job as a poetry teacher to Gabler's flirtatious wife, Caroline. Her ambitious and cynical husband makes her apparent fragility all the more appealing to Lorenzo. Alas, he's told she "whored only with the highest aristocrats."

With operatic high energy, Lebow shows us the hunger for hierarchy that motivates and constrains noblemen. There's a shocking tale of paternity, seemingly dignified tutors and protectors go way off course, and the household help is drawn into the drama. Guilt lurks everywhere. Meanwhile, Mozart and Lorenzo rush to finish The Marriage of Figaro, adhering to the whims of the emperor, who demands last-minute changes. This lively novel could probably be set to music.

From page 295: "You know, I think we have achieved the near impossible, Lorenzo," Mozart chortled. "That rare moment when a good composer, one who understands what great theater is, meets an able poet."

"Able?" I teased. "Is that all I am?"

"No!" He laughed. "You are that true phoenix—the perfect partner! A brilliant librettist and a brilliant conniver!" ◆

Traveler's Check

While in Capri, consider a trip to Mount Solaro, the island's highest point, aboard a one-seater chairlift that offers some of the region's best views.

ISLANDS IN THE SUN: The Amalfi region offers both seaside leisure and a bit of ancient history.

The Escape Artist / Alexandra Cavallo

WORTH THE COAST

SOUTHERN ITALY'S AMALFI COASTLINE OFFERS SPLENDOR BY THE SEA.

WHEN LIFE GIVES YOU LEMONS, make limoncello. That's the prevailing mantra of southern Italy's Amalfi Coast, where the fresh smell of citrus mingles with the ocean breeze. Lemons are everywhere in the bustling seaside towns along the roughly 25 miles of scenic coastline—gracing the region's famed ceramics, hanging from roadside stands in ripe bunches (some grown to the size of a small child's head, to the endless wonder of tourists) and, of course, winding up in limoncello, the Italian digestif that many restaurants make in-house and present to patrons at the end of the meal as a matter of course.

The Amalfi Coast is best toured by water, but first, one must fly into Naples and set up a home base such as Sorrento, a popular tourist destination that nonetheless retains its old-world authenticity. Fight jet-lag and enjoy the scenery for the hour or so's drive there, the first half of which lies in the shadow of the dormant but still simmering Mount Vesuvius; the second half takes you for a rather dizzying ride along winding mountain roads, each turn revealing a breathtaking new vista just beyond a rickety guard rail. In Sorrento, book a room at the Grand Hotel De La Ville or the slightly tonier Grand Hotel Ambasciatori, both of which boast sweeping sea views. De La Ville's premier rooms also offer front-row seats to the boisterous soccer games hosted in the stadium below, while the Ambasciatori has balconies with private hot tubs where guests can sip prosecco while watching the last embers of a molten sun dip below the island of Capri.

Travelers with deeper pockets might procure accommodations on Li Galli, a small archipelago owned by famed Russian dancer Rudolf Nureyev in the early '90s that can be rented out for a cool $200,000 per week. Recent guests are rumored to include Lady Gaga, and it's said Sting once performed at a wedding held in the island chapel. Of course, if your disposable income doesn't stretch quite that far, you can still catch a glimpse of the islands. Charter a private boat—complete with a dashing Italian captain (ask for Agostino) and a below-deck kitchenette stocked with Peroni, wine and panini—through Capitano Ago, an extremely obliging local company. Once aboard, a seasoned captain will guide your group on a relaxing route through deep-blue Mediterranean waters that includes spectacular views of the craggy mountain coastline, replete with stucco structures in sun-beaten whites, pinks, yellows and blues.

The boat stops in the popular destinations of Amalfi and Positano, where sun-and-salt-splashed passengers disembark to shake out their sea legs and explore the towns for a couple of hours. Such explorations don't include much past browsing the local wares, snacking on caprese salads and crusty bread and sipping wine while enjoying yet another impossibly lovely view—but who's complaining? While in Amalfi, one might forgo the sun for a spell to soak up some culture at the Cathedral of St. Andrew, centrally located atop a steep flight of stairs where tired tourists sit to rest and survey their purchases. Built in the early 1200s, the cathedral is small but worth seeing—a tour takes no more than 20 minutes, leaving plenty of time for another glass of wine before you hop back aboard.

Make sure to reserve an entire day for a tour of Capri, Amalfi's most-touted island, and for good reason. Some of the best views and shopping (if you can afford it) are found there, but try to resist the lure of the designer shops and instead seek out Antonio Viva, the island's master shoemaker since 1958, who will craft you a custom pair of leather shoes while you wait (most for less than €100) and counts Richard Gere and Kobe Bryant as customers.

If you prefer to tour by land, book a trip through Italy Limousine, whose charming proprietor, Rino, keeps up a lively narration of the sights—including a stop at a grotto so picture-perfect it resembles a Disney attraction—and might just treat you to an espresso at his favorite cafe. Speaking of road trips, save a day for an excursion to Pompeii, the city famously razed by Mount Vesuvius, where you can wander surviving structures (including an ancient brothel complete with racy depictions of the acts once offered within) and view bodies preserved by the volcano's ash. While it's still light, make the half-hour drive to Vesuvius and work off all the hearty Italian dining with a brisk trek to its peak, where you can peer into the cavernous abyss—and enjoy yet more grand vistas.

When it comes to dining, here's a tip: Keep it simple. Ask for the house wine (red is best) wherever you go. Unlike in the States, it tends to be locally made, delicious and priced well below €10. Order the fish in any of the seaside eateries, where waitstaff proudly present the day's catch—head and tail still intact—tableside for your consideration. Elsewhere, stick to housemade pastas (cooked extremely, but pleasantly, al dente) and caprese salads with buffalo mozzarella. End your meal with a shot of limoncello—a bracing jolt of tartly sweet liqueur as restorative as a sun-soaked trip down the Italian coast. ◆

Pity Charlestown: It always seems to get short shrift in the restaurant department. Southie and the South End share Charlestown's historical richness, socioeconomic diversity and proximity to downtown, but both have thriving restaurant scenes the Town lacks. Twenty-five years ago, a young Todd English built his budding national reputation at Olives in City Square. That glory now long faded, Charlestown hasn't had a destination dining spot since, its scattered recent openings dominated by chain outlets. Stepping into that void is the new Brewer's Fork, a project that combines a serious beer-geek bar, a modern gastropub and a gourmet pizza joint with a wood-burning oven. The joy on the faces of locals already crowding it is palpable.

Small plates focus on the gastropub angle, showcasing good local ingredients and copious smoking, curing and pickling, with salumi courtesy of Waltham's outstanding Moody's Delicatessen, whence chef/owner John Paine originated. Properly shucked raw oysters ($14/six, $24/12) hail from local harbors such as Cotuit and Duxbury. A charcuterie board ($16) features lovely housemade chicken-liver mousse and good, sharp pickles alongside Moody's fine soppressata, lomo and salami. Local cheeses and crackers ($15) are another exemplary assortment for nibbling, with firm Vermont sheep cheese, creamy and fierce Wisconsin blue cheese, and soft, tangy Northern California goat cheese well-paired with housemade chutneys, preserves and pickles. The smoked bluefish plate ($9) delivers a gentler version of a sometimes-strong local game fish as a loose salad with refreshing garnishes of sliced radishes and celery leaves.

The pickle plate ($7) runs colorfully through the garden, using a variety of piquant brines, some spicy-hot, some sweet, on sunchokes, cucumbers, asparagus, baby carrots, fennel, okra and onions. Local burrata ($13) matches firm-skinned, creamy-centered fresh mozzarella with a brilliant salad of fresh peas, artichoke and lomo. Cheddar and ale soup ($9) boasts a surprising lightness of body, crisp grated apples and welcome slices of Moody's kielbasa. Cured raw beef salad ($10) recalls a slightly Yankified take on tiger's tears, counterpointing deep-flavored, tender beef with fresh mint and cilantro, crunchy peanuts, foraged mushrooms, mayo made luscious with schmaltz and the acid zing of black-garlic vin. Oven-roasted meatballs ($10) offer homey Italian-American comfort adorned by good red sauce and sharp, powdery romano.

I suspect Paine's kitchen may garner its most enduring fame with its pizza, quickly cooked in the big, squat, wood-fired oven that anchors the open kitchen. It's a marvel of the Neapolitan-inspired style: a tender, bubbly thin crust given some chew and depth with a light char, plus a handful of quality, clear-flavored toppings on each. Pea-zza pizza ($15) features fresh English peas, smoky ham, gently aromatic shallots, fresh mozzarella and stringy Gruyere. Clam pizza ($16) is a well-balanced version of the classic New Haven white pie with briny local clams, bacon, shallots, sheep cheese, thyme and parsley butter. Salami pizza ($15) takes a classic red-sauce and mozzarella base and makes it memorable with Moody's extraordinary Genoa salami. Mushroom Man pizza ($15) is likewise simple, but arugula and pristine, otherworldly-looking foraged mushrooms make it sublime.

Co-owner/general manager Michael Cooney's experience at Brookline's Publick House shows in the serious geekiness of the beer list, from its curation reflecting small producers around the world, to the beer-nerd lore commanded by his bartenders, to the assortment of specific glassware for each pour. Barely skimming its 30-draft depths, we sampled Germany's Freigiest Abraxxxas ($11), a cloudy, bracingly tart, slightly smoky Berliner Weisse; Wild Beer Co.'s Somerset Wild ($12) from England, another quite sour beer with the complex barnyard accents of wild yeast and bacteria; and Ballast Point Victory at Sea ($10), an Imperial porter from California flavored with vanilla and coffee beans, like an intensely bitter stout sweetened with cream soda. The assortment of unusual bottled ciders, all far more complex and dry than American macro junk, includes Cider Creek Saison Reserve ($15 for 500 ml), a hazy, earthy cider from upstate New York, and Isastegi Sidra ($13 for 375 ml), a supremely tangy, slightly funky, nearly flat Basque cider. Wine lovers aren't left out: More than 30 bottles ($32-$85, most under $45) and a dozen wines by the glass ($9-$14) provide a range of affordable options drawn mostly from the U.S. and Old World.

Complementing the bar staff's encyclopedic enthusiasm about beer, dining-room service proves casually friendly and solicitous in a manner that suits the restaurant's bluff, industrial charm. The wide-open space, exposed infrastructure, open kitchen and hard surfaces of brick and wood contribute to a noise level that approaches, but doesn't quite breach, the painful-conversation barrier. Brewer's Fork may not put Charlestown on the national map the way Todd English once did, but it does represent a first for the neighborhood: a quality, casual indie with the kind of extraordinary pizza and bar program that should draw food and beer nerds from all across town. For long-suffering residents of the Town, that doubtless feels way overdue. ◆

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ Joslin Diabetes Center's Asian American Diabetes Initiative held its A Taste of Ginger benefit at the Museum of Fine Arts on March 23. Area restaurants hosted 26 food stations for the 400 guests, while Dr. Jennifer K. Sun was recognized for her role within the Asian American community and her contributions to the charity's mission. The evening raised more than $335,000.

➜ On March 26, New England Center for Arts & Technology's culinary school celebrated its second anniversary with The NECAT Culinary Experience. Held at its Bradston Street headquarters, the cooking competition between two teams of professional and student chefs was followed by an auction, and a dozen Boston-area chefs staffed food stations for partygoers. The nearly 400 guests raised more than $150,000.

Q: I LIKE TO WEAR FITTED T-SHIRTS, BUT I HAVE LITTLE ROLLS OF BACK FAT BELOW MY BRA THAT CREATE BULGES. I DON'T WANT TO WEAR SPANX ALL THE TIME; WHAT ARE MY OPTIONS?

A: Unsightly bulges from back fat is a universal problem. There are two ways to eliminate this stubborn fat.

If the back fat is substantial enough to "pinch an inch" we can freeze it away with CoolSculpting, which uses controlled cooling to target, crystallize, and kill fat cells.

If you have less back fat, we can melt it away utilizing RF (radio frequency) for deep tissue heating, breaking down and destroying fat cells.

Both of these procedures are quick and safe non-surgical body contouring treatments that are highly effective for reducing back fat. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime.

Results are visible within a few weeks of treatment. As we go into spring, this is the perfect time of year to eliminate extra fat and any bulges that bother you!

GATHER 'ROUND

COMMUNAL STORIES BURN BRIGHT AT IFFBOSTON'S 13TH EDITION.

INDEPENDENT FILM FESTIVAL BOSTON, the gold standard of New England's many film festivals, enters its 13th year on April 22-29 with a lineup of 21 narrative films and 41 documentary features carefully curated by program director Nancy Campbell, managing director Brian Tamm and associate director Judy Wong. Throughout the year, the tight-knit trio tirelessly attends other festivals—such as Sundance and SXSW—to track down and acquire the movie selections that help our eight-day filmgoing feast rival the festivals mounted in Park City and Austin.

But it's not just the films that make this festival something special. The organizers of IFFBoston strive to connect audience members with visiting filmmakers—and with one another. Poster artwork for the festival encapsulates this communal theme: Under a star-filled sky, a marshmallow is toasted on a stick, and the smoke forms the words "Gather 'Round," as though stories passed down for generations are about to be shared around a campfire.

There won't be any outdoor screenings at IFFBoston—films are spread out across the area's independent movie houses, the Somerville, Brattle and Coolidge Corner Theatres—but storytelling remains at the fore.

"This fest is enormously important to me," says David Chen, the first-time director of The Primary Instinct, a stage-set documentary starring character actor Stephen Tobolowsky. While you probably don't know his name (yet), you'll likely recognize the performer who's appeared in more than 200 films and television shows during the past four decades. Who can forget Ned Ryerson from Groundhog Day? That's Tobolowsky. Chen, who grew up in Chelmsford and Lexington, first met "Tobo" (as Chen affectionately calls him) when the actor appeared as a guest on The / Filmcast, the popular podcast Chen began recording in Boston back in 2008, more than 300 episodes ago. A rapport was formed, and the two spun off a separate successful podcast, The Tobolowsky Files, where the actor shares his profoundly funny and moving stories about life, love and the entertainment industry.

With nearly 100 film screenings...there's more than enough to satisfy every viewer.

In The Primary Instinct, Chen captures Tobolowsky delivering a captivating monologue in front of a packed audience at the majestic Moore Theatre, a 1,400-seat performance space in Seattle, Chen's home for the past three years. His subject masterfully uses the art of storytelling as he tries to answer the question "Why do we tell stories?"

"IFFBoston is the first film festival I ever went to," Chen says by phone, telling a story of his own. When he attended the seventh edition in 2009, he recalls, "I was a fest newbie."

He was also hooked. Even though he accepted a new job in 2012 that would take him to the Pacific Northwest, he made sure not to fly out until the morning after catching The Queen of Versailles, IFFBoston's closing-night film that year.

On April 26 at 7:30 pm, he returns to Boston for a special screening of his documentary ahead of its official world premiere later this year. Chen and Tobolowsky will introduce the film in the Somerville Theatre's main house and answer audience questions after.

Theirs isn't the only standout documentary. Festival favorite Bobcat Goldthwait returns with his first nonfiction film: Call Me Lucky, a deeply affecting portrait of former Boston Phoenix columnist Barry Crimmins. Goldthwait highlights Crimmins' immeasurable contributions to Boston comedy before delving into a painful past that sparked his activism.

Meanwhile, Maddy Myers, another former writer for The Phoenix who covers video games as Paste Magazine's assistant editor, is one of the subjects of GTFO, Shannon Sun-Higginson's look at the rampant misogyny that plagues the male-dominated electronic entertainment industry. Then there's Stray Dog, directed by Debra Granik, who won IFFBoston's Audience Award and Special Jury Prize for 2010's Winter's Bone, the film that launched Jennifer Lawrence's career. Now, Granik focuses her camera on biker Ron Hall in this cinema vérité portrait of the Vietnam vet, whom she met on the earlier set.

It's not all docs, though. There are a number of narrative highlights, like the New England premiere of The End of the Tour from director James Ponsoldt, who'll be in attendance. Opening the festival in Somerville at 7:30 pm on April 22, it's based on the true story of a days-long interview between the late writer David Foster Wallace (played by Jason Segel) and Rolling Stone reporter David Lipsky (Jesse Eisenberg).

Closing the fest at the Coolidge at 7:30 pm on April 29 is another New England premiere: Alfonso Gomez-Rejon's Me and Earl and the Dying Girl. Featuring Nick Offerman and Jon Bernthal, this coming-of-age tale about a teenage filmmaker (Thomas Mann) befriending a sick classmate was adapted from his own novel by Jesse Andrews, who will be on hand for a Q&A.

Former Bostonian Andrew Bujalski, accidental father of the mumblecore movement, makes a return appearance at IFFBoston with Results, a comedy starring Kevin Corrigan, Guy Pierce and Cobie Smulders. Also promising is Bob and the Trees, Diego Ongaro's feature-length expansion of his narrative short about a rural Massachusetts logger with a weakness for golf and gangster rap that garnered cheers at 2011's festival.

With nearly 100 film screenings, including 23 narrative and 24 documentary shorts, there's more than enough to satisfy every viewer. So, grab a bag of marshmallows and head to the movies. But please, no toasting—any fire best remains an onscreen special effect. ◆

INDEPENDENT FILM FESTIVAL BOSTON runs April 22-29 at the Somerville Theatre in Davis Square, the Brattle Theatre in Harvard Square, the Coolidge Corner Theatre in Brookline and UMass Boston in Dorchester. For a complete schedule and information on tickets, festival passes, memberships, filmmaker Q&A sessions, film panels, parties and events, visit iffboston.org.

RABBIT RUN

LOCALLY BRED COMPOSER BRIDGES INDIE-ROCK AND CLASSICAL DREAMS

Growing up in the Southern Massachusetts town of Berkley, Ellis Ludwig-Leone lived a musical double life, playing in teenage rock bands while taking classical piano lessons about 45 minutes away.

"The classical piano thing I kept pretty secret from my high school friends," says Ludwig-Leone, 25. "It wasn't really until I got out of high school and started studying music in a more serious way that I was able to see the connections."

Those genres blend in his chamber-pop group San Fermin, which plays the Sinclair on May 8 and has Ludwig-Leone drawing from both his classical composition studies at Yale and his immersion in Brooklyn's indie-rock kingdom, boosted by work as a musical assistant to Nico Muhly.

"To actually help him, you had to get good and really fast," Ludwig-Leone says of the arranger. "The amount of projects he worked on was kind of staggering." For the young apprentice, that included score transcriptions and help with recording sessions for Sufjan Stevens, Passion Pit and the National.

Ludwig-Leone reflects that musical fast lane in his own growth, particularly on San Fermin's April 21 release, Jackrabbit. It's a leap from the band's eponymous 2013 debut, both darker and more streamlined. "If that first record was scattershot, this is much more focused," he says from his Brooklyn home. "Once you start focusing, you can also dig a little deeper, emotionally as well."

Indeed, while San Fermin's debut tapped into imagery of sleeping and dreaming, Jackrabbit builds on themes of age and mortality. "There's a twitchy desperation that can come from continuing to grow up and live your life and not have any of the answers you want to have," Ludwig-Leone says. "I felt like the possibilities of my life were expanding in some ways and contracting in others."

"You're trying to push at the edges of your experience."

Along those lines, "Two Scenes" offers the lyric "You can't tell if you're floating or falling out of place, like the astronaut calls a little dot a home, like he can tell from outer space." But while the keyboardist/composer says he's comfortable writing lyrics, having enjoyed prose and poetry in high school, he doesn't do any singing.

SAN FERMIN
plays the Sinclair on May 8.

That falls to Allen Tate and Charlene Kaye, who alternate lead vocals on the new album, which features the same musicians that tour as San Fermin, rounded out by guitarist Tyler McDiarmid, violinist Rebekah Durham, drummer Michael Hanf, trumpeter John Brandon and baritone saxophonist Stephen Chen. "It was weird touring the first album because some of them weren't even on the record," says Ludwig-Leone, who drafted 22 musicians (including Lucius singers Jess Wolfe and Holly Laessig) for San Fermin's debut. "Everybody's gotten more invested."

Because he knows all the players, Ludwig-Leone says he can "tailor the parts" he writes. And in addition to sheet music, he composes with the music production program Logic on his laptop. "I have sounds in Logic that emulate members of the band, so I'm able to map out and basically hear what's going to happen," he says. That includes a trombone sample to approximate Tate's baritone voice, which conveys a solemnness that brings to mind the National's Matt Berninger.

Ludwig-Leone—who also has scored works for the New York City Ballet and the Atlanta Symphony—met Tate at a Berklee songwriting camp when they were in their mid-teens. But if the keyboardist hadn't written the material that became San Fermin's debut during a six-week post-college retreat in Canada, Tate would have been off to law school, Ludwig-Leone says. Instead they became charter members of a band named after Spain's festival for the running of the bulls.

"It feels weird that people want to put themselves in tense and dangerous situations like that," Ludwig-Leone says. "It's a little like what you try to do as a musician. You're trying to push at the edges of your experience."

If music hadn't become his focus in high school, he says he would have pursued basketball, another interest with a parallel in San Fermin's drama-spiked concerts. "The performance aspect of being in a band is not that different from playing sports," says Ludwig-Leone. "It's physical and intense and you get sweaty." ◆

BLABBY CABBIE

A PRO TELLS ALL, INCLUDING...THE ONE QUESTION NEVER TO ASK A CAB DRIVER!!!

BACK IN COLLEGE, MY FIRST STUDENT job was driving the Jitney, which was like a free taxi for undergrads. It was a Chevy Astro van. My first night on the job, I got pulled over for speeding. I couldn't find my wallet because I put it on the floor and it slid to the back of the van (on account of all the speeding). Later on, I used the Jitney to take friends to buy beer using their fake IDs. This was particularly nerve-wracking when I pulled up to the dorm to find it surrounded by cops, a situation precipitated by a fellow student's decision to steal the pizza guy's car and abandon it right outside the front door. I drove the beer-filled van around back to the service entrance. Somehow I never got fired from that job, but neither did I get rehired the next semester. Thus ended my short, colorful career as a cab driver.

I've since done a one-night stint as an Uber driver, and that experience exposed me to a lot of anti-taxi sentiment from the Uber crowd. Everyone has taxi horror stories, but guess what, people? The taxi drivers have their stories, too. Passengers are not always models of decorum, either. And I know this from talking to my father, who drives a cab on the North Shore.

He drives the night shift, 6 pm to 6 am, and the wee hours tend to generate a lot of action. If you need to go to Lynn at 3 am, generally it's not to return library books or volunteer at Habitat for Humanity. No, at 3 am you're up to something. "I had one guy come running out of the house with this huge guy chasing him," my father told me. "He jumped in and said, 'Lock the doors! Go, go go!' Later on he tried to sell me a watch, so maybe he stole it from the guy who was chasing him. I didn't ask." Not asking: good cabbie policy.

In the middle of the night, passengers tend to be not so sober. Hey, I've been there. But I've never wet myself in a cab, and dealing with that scenario is apparently a common occupational hazard for cabbies—you know, if a cab kind of smells like urine, there's probably a reason. "One girl passed out and pissed herself," he says. "I got to her house and I had to call the cops, because I needed to get her out of the car but we're not allowed to touch anyone." Adding insult to asparagus pee, unconscious people aren't great tippers.

Ah, the fare-stiffers. Driving a cab requires having some faith in humanity, faith that isn't always rewarded. Sometimes, though, even the lowlifes redeem themselves. "I had one guy who stiffed me on a fare, and then the next week I picked him up again. The second time, he went to Rhode Island and tipped me $100. He honestly didn't realize he didn't have the money the first time." For my part, I think I'd lock the doors and lay rubber the moment I saw a known fare-stiffer approaching the car, but I have a low opinion of mankind. And what do I know? I was an Uber driver, where the money is all in the cloud. I think I got paid in Dogecoins.

Of course, driving a cab also introduces you to some interesting, friendly weirdos, like the kid who'd just skateboarded to Danvers from Wells, Maine. But learning people's stories requires interaction, and conversation is not always forthcoming. Nathan for You did a segment where taxi passengers could push a button to either opt in or out on conversation with the driver. My dad thought that was pretty funny, if largely unnecessary. "You can tell right off the bat if people want to talk or not," he says. "If they're talkers, I'll talk. If they're not, I shut up." Because it's better to ride in silence than to force awkward banter, especially when it comes to the dumbest recurring question that passengers dredge up for drivers. If this were BuzzFeed, this story would be titled "The ONE question NEVER to ask a CAB DRIVER!!!"

What do I know? I was an Uber driver, where the money is all in the cloud. I think I got paid in Dogecoins.

And that question is: "So, have you always been a cab driver?" That shows some failure of imagination, doesn't it? As if the Crown Vic is a cocoon and the driver hatched fully formed behind the steering wheel.

He has some other advice for passenger etiquette, too. Don't call two companies and take whichever cab gets there first. Don't be a line-jumper—that is, getting out just short of the city limits and then walking the rest of the way so you don't have to pay full fare. Don't take forever to come out. Don't puke. But there is a macro rule that supersedes all others, whether you barf or take 15 minutes to drag yourself out of Tipsy McStagger's at last call. "All annoyances are forgiven," he says, "with a decent tip." ◆

HOTEL HELL

SOUND ADVICE ON TRAVEL WOES, CLEAN BREAKS AND TEXTING MOM

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is the Boston Globe number-one best-seller No One Ever Told Us That, a collection of letters with life lessons for his grandchildren. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I'm so frustrated by technology, and I'm a smart businesswoman who travels a lot. On my trips these days I'm finding that many upscale hotels are going over-the-top with tech: heat, lights, phone, shades, even the toilets. On working trips, I don't want or need puzzles in every hotel room or new buttons I need to learn just to sit on the toilet. How can I complain and not look like I'm not "with it"? I'm totally with you. In my view, the people who create the modern high-end hotel must be hated by their spouses. The technology in these rooms was designed for utopia, not for the real world. Here's a small "for instance." I just returned from a trip to the West Coast, where the last two nights were spent in one of my all-time favorite hotels, which has had a total upgrade in the past few years. Everything in my room was controlled by handhelds, buttons, tiny clickers you had to be 22 years old to even see. These small demons controlled shades, TV, music, heat/air, draperies, room lights, desk lamps, locks and even fountain jets for the bum and other unmentionable parts that they label "front" or "rear."

After one night, I was proud of myself. I felt I had mastered all of the controls and was feeling young and relevant. My last night, I came back to the room, feeling no pain, master of tech. Then I couldn't shut off the overhead lights. Finally, after much trial and error, I turned them down. Then I couldn't shut off the night table lamps, no matter what I did. So I unscrewed the bulbs, my hand wrapped in a towel. I couldn't shut off the bathroom lights, so I closed the door tight. Pissed off, I slept.

Morning came, and I had to catch a plane. I hopped out of bed, but I could not open the heavy bathroom door—it was locked from the inside. What? Wildly annoyed and in distress, I called the engineer. "I'm Reuben," he said. I pointed to the door. He leaned down and flicked something no bigger than a pinprick. Open it went. "What idiot architect," I asked, "would design a lock on the outside of a bathroom door? Or lights that can't shut off? Reuben, if you go to a hotel on business or pleasure, you don't want to think about the room. This is madness."

PUSHING BUTTONS. The modern hotel room can be a cause for consternation.

"I agree with you completely," he said. "What can I do? I'm surrounded by idiots. Don't tell anyone I said that. We get complaints all the time."

"If I come back here, Reuben, I'm going to request a king-size bed and that you have to sleep in it next to me."

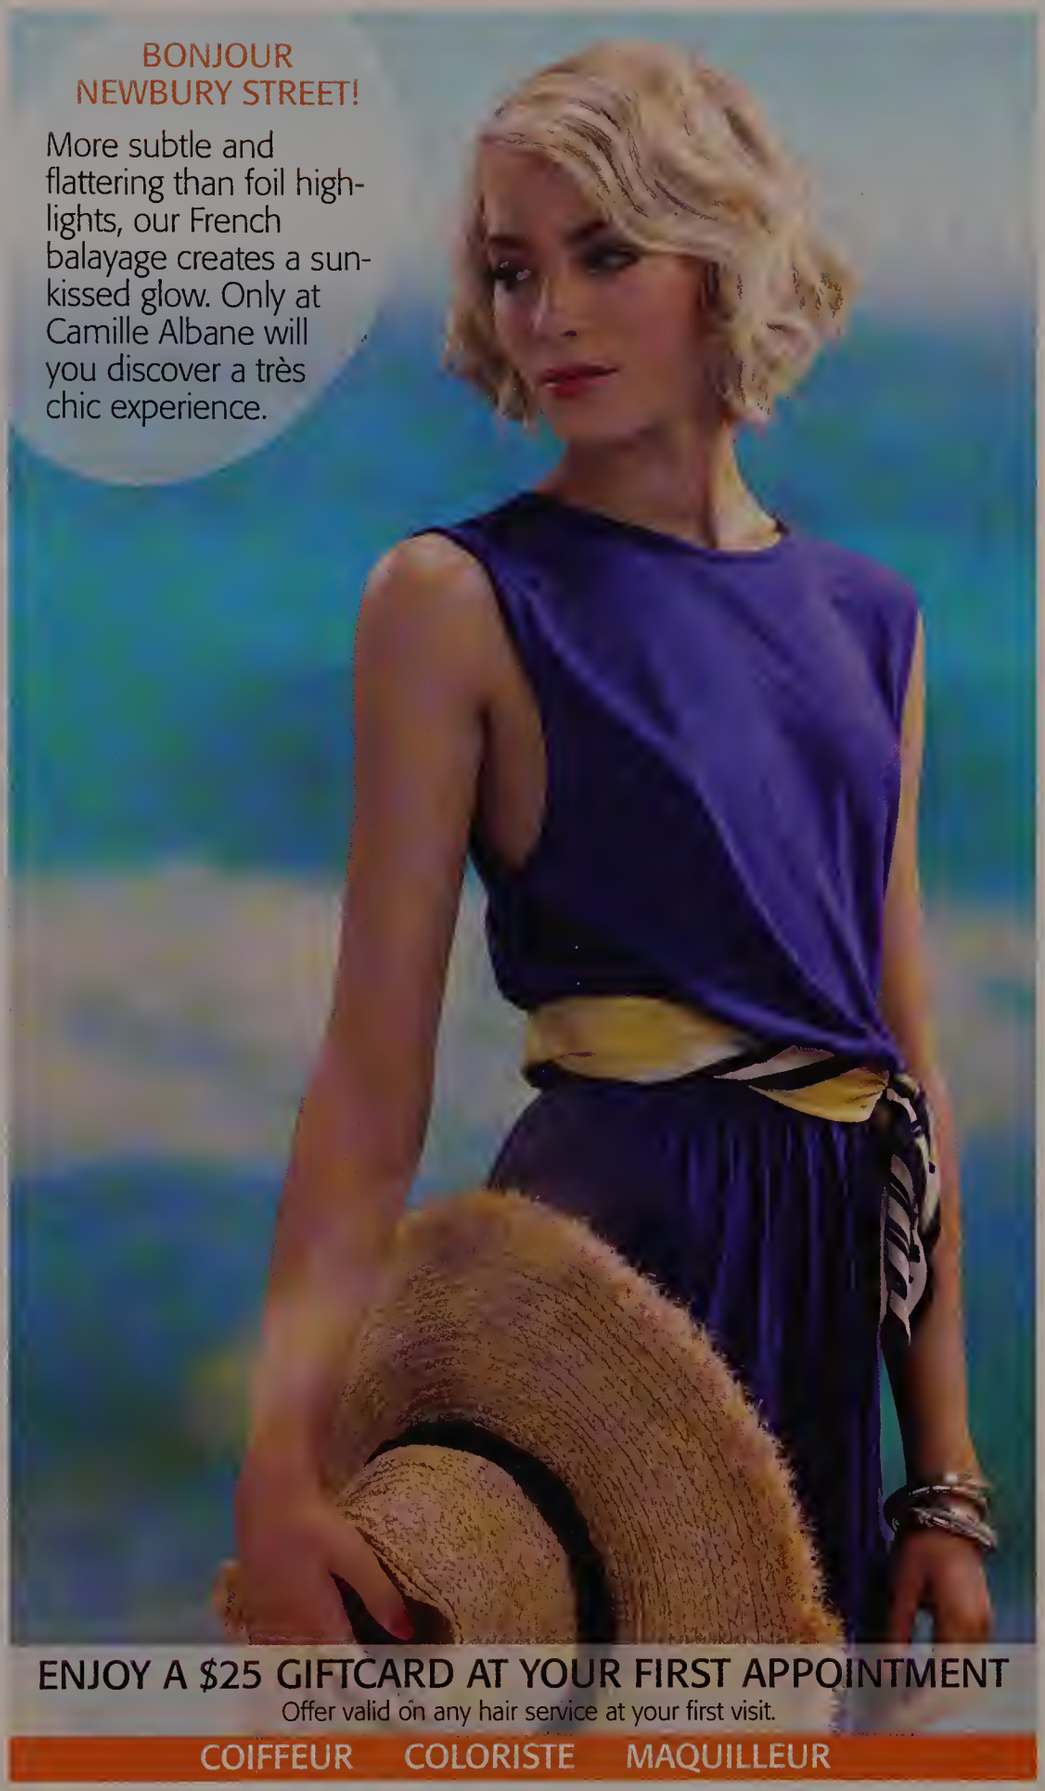
He loved that, and I barely made my plane.

All you and I can do about this is ask to speak to the manager and state your case. If they lose enough business, they'll get the picture. Hotels where the engineers are happier than the guests will eventually have a problem.

Simple is so much better than complex.

Mom still expects me to check in with her several times per day even though I haven't lived with her in years. I try to respond to her texts as soon as I can, but she still gets worried and/or offended if I don't get right back to her. How do I assure her that I'm an adult and can take care of myself? Your mother knows you're an adult. This is really about her loneliness and her life with you out of the nest.

After my father died, I talked to my mother every day, just to make sure she was OK. This was before email and texting, and the conversations were long enough that once a day was plenty. One of the problems with texting is that the back-and-forth never ends. It's way too open-ended. So I believe that you should suggest something like this: "Mom, I love you and my life is complicated. How about we have a phone conversation every day, for maybe 10 minutes or so, and get things off our chests? Then I can hear your voice."



One of the problems with texting is that the back-and-forth never ends. It's way too open-ended.

This flatters her and set some limits. If you stick to them, your relationship may be much easier to manage. People tend to love us more if there are boundaries.

This guy I went to high school with is constantly texting my friend and asking her to hang out. They had a short-lived fling a few years back that ended in him having a bit of an obsession with her. Lately she's been saying she wants to just hang out with him once so he'll leave her alone. I don't agree with her. Do you think there's a better way she could get him to back off? Let's see, your friend thinks that if she makes love to this guy once more, that could end it? Sure could, if she managed to make the love-making a horrible experience. But Woody Allen said, "I've never had a bad orgasm."

"One last fling" is an immature way to break anything off forever. How about saying, "You're an interesting person"—even if he isn't—"but we all grow at different rates. It's over."

Honesty often works best. Even for dishonest people.◆

Soroff On / Hong Chau

PLAYING VICE

THE ACTRESS REFLECTS ON PAUL THOMAS ANDERSON, LYING FOR A LIVING AND (NOT) GOING FULL FRONTAL.

UP-AND-COMING ACTRESS HONG CHAU IMMIGRATED to the United States from Vietnam with her family as a child and grew up in Louisiana, mainly in New Orleans. She attended Boston University, where she fell into acting, and had the good fortune of returning to her hometown to work on the HBO series Treme for three seasons, in the recurring role of Linh. Last year, she landed her first series regular role on the NBC romantic comedy A to Z, playing Lora, a sourpuss techie at an online dating company. She also made her feature film debut as massage parlor vixen Jade in Paul Thomas Anderson's Inherent Vice, based on the Thomas Pynchon novel. She lives in Los Angeles with her dog.

JONATHAN SOROFF: How's your Southern accent?
HONG CHAU: I can turn it on, I guess. I grew up there. Some people say I don't have an accent, but I feel like I kind of do. I watched a lot of TV growing up. My parents didn't speak English. So I didn't model on them. So I guess the way I sound is a mixture of watching a lot of TV and the way my friends' parents sounded.

Did you ever consider changing your name to something more Americanized? No. I fought hard against that as a kid. I think my best friend in third grade tried to change my name to Helen, and I just never responded to it.

Is it harder to be an Asian actor? It's hard for everybody across the board. I don't feel like I have anything new to add with respect to the lack of opportunity or quality of roles for people who aren't white, male and heterosexual. Right now, I think it's better for me just to do good work and have other people decry the unfairness.

When you arrived at BU, what was something about Boston that struck you as weird? I wasn't prepared for how many affluent kids I'd be going to school with. That was a shocker. BU is a huge school, but it was really obvious. In Louisiana, you obviously have your rich white people, but for some reason, they're different up north. I remember doing catering work at the Algonquin Club and the Somerset Club, and I was like, "This is a different type of old rich white person than I've ever encountered."

Thing you liked best about Boston? There were so many. I don't know anything about baseball, but I really liked going to Fenway. I liked the Garment District. The Brattle. I like the novelist Richard Yates a lot, so I thought it was pretty cool that Crossroads, where he hung out, was right down the road.

Are you as much of a computer whiz as your A to Z character? Not at all. I prefer paper and pencil. I don't like to use the calendar on my phone. I don't even like to talk on the phone. I'd much rather have brunch with people, see them in person. I hate getting texts that say, "What's up?" If you want to know, let's go grab coffee.

What's more appealing: a leading role or being a part of an ensemble? I like being part of an ensemble, and those are the kind of things I like to watch, too. I really like supporting actors. I watch TV differently because I am an actor. I'll watch something for that actor who has one or two lines, playing a cop or a waitress. Those are actually really hard roles. And I always think about those people's families huddled around their television.

"Joaquin is really, really funny. I always make an animal analogy. There's something so feral about him."

Role you're dying to play? I'd really like to do something in the sci-fi or fantasy genre where there are no boundaries.

Biggest audition disaster? [Laughs] I don't sing or dance, but when I was starting out, I would look at the casting notices in Backstage magazine. I once went to an open call for a musical. They were taping all the auditions. I quickly learned a song and went in, and it was horrible. It's on tape somewhere, and hopefully it will never get out.

Fantasy love scene partner? I don't like even watching love scenes, because I know what goes into them. My first was on Treme, and I just look at them very differently now. They're so technical, and they're so long and awkward, no matter how comfortable you are with the other actor. It's just weird. So I guess I'll say a dog. I'd love to make out with a dog on camera. [Laughs]

So was Treme personal for you? It was amazing. That role just kind of came out of the blue, and people always ask if they plucked me off the street, or out of the swamp, and gave me that role. I actually auditioned for it while I was out in Los Angeles, and I would fly back to New Orleans to work on it, which was great, because I grew up there. Every location where we shot was somewhere I'd been to as a kid. All the restaurants and neighborhoods were familiar.

Did they know beforehand that you were from New Orleans? No, I don't think so, because I didn't meet anyone. I put myself on tape, and I found out a week or two later that I got the role. I flew to New Orleans without speaking to a single person involved in the production, which is pretty bizarre.

Who's hotter: Joaquin Phoenix or Josh Brolin? I think most women of a certain age would say Josh Brolin, but Joaquin is really, really funny. I always make an animal analogy. There's something so feral about him, and it's great.

Would you ever do full-frontal nudity? I think I offered it up on Inherent Vice, but I don't think anybody wants to see my naked body. [Laughs]

Director you're dying to work with? Paul Thomas Anderson again. I'd work with Wes Anderson, too. I like Pedro Almodovar, although I don't speak Spanish. Ang Lee is great. There are so many.

Worst part of being on set? It happens before getting on set. I hate going to wardrobe fittings. You have to strip down naked in front of this person you just met, who may or may not be cool. You may or may not have groomed yourself. And people are always giving me chicken cutlets to stuff in the side of my bra. It's just not fun.

Do you think you have to be a good liar to be a good actor? No. I think being naïve and innocent is a better way, because you can trick yourself into believing that all these circumstances are real. So I guess being good at lying to yourself is a plus. ◆

THE SWING of THINGS

Every person defines value differently, as the passionate collectors in these pages prove. We tapped them for a few object lessons.

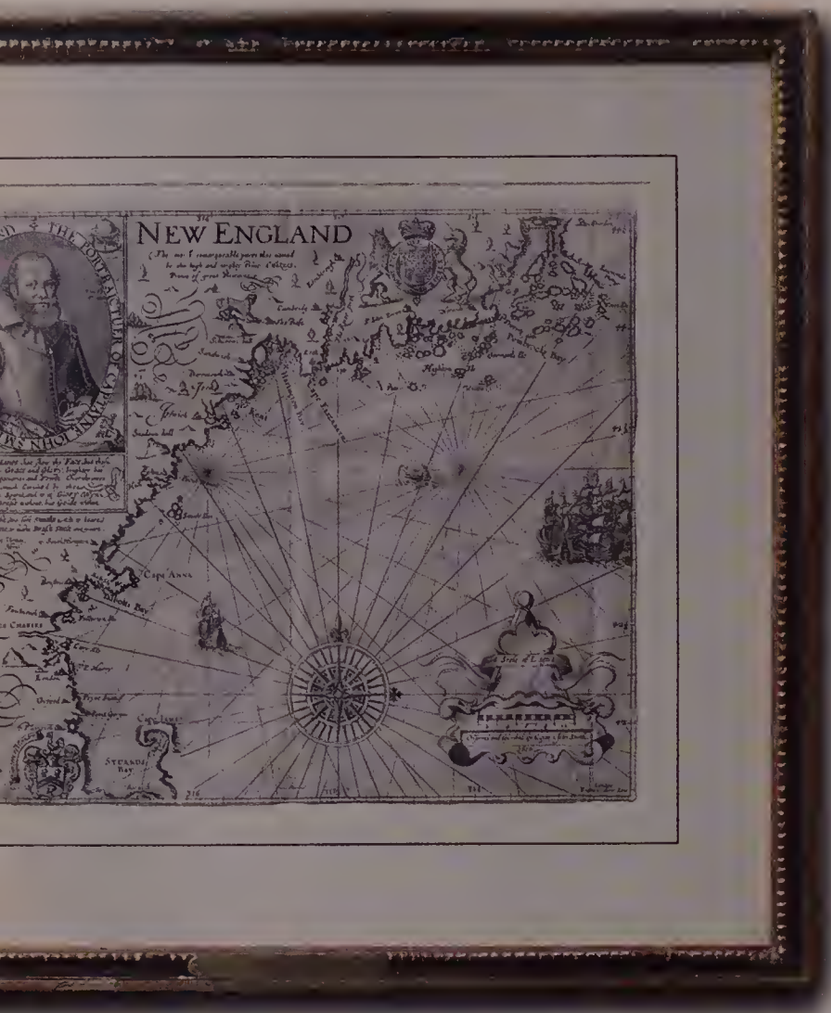
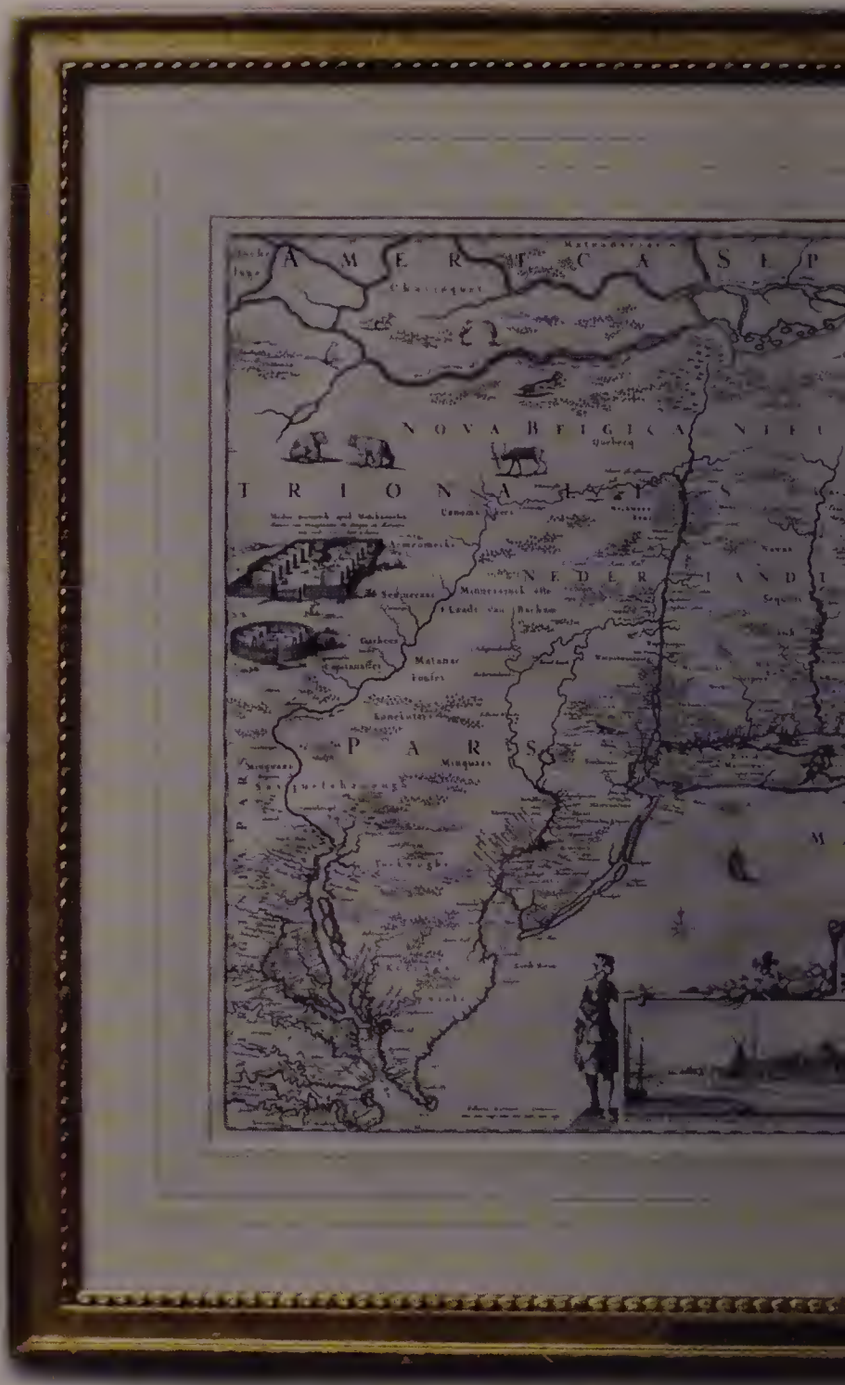
Packing a Punch

Joey DePasquale's collection of sports memorabilia had a simple start. When his restaurateur father, Frank, would travel to Las Vegas, he'd return with a gift for his son. But now, the DePasquale Ventures COO estimates that his collection is worth seven figures, thanks to gems like Michael Jordan's sneaker from Game 6 of the 1998 NBA Finals. Another highlight: more than two dozen signed boxing gloves from famed prizefighters. DePasquale often pairs gloves based on historic fights, so he has a Muhammad Ali glove next to one from Joe Frazier, Evander Holyfield with Mike Tyson, local champ Marvin Hagler with Thomas Hearns. He's got one from legendary North Ender Tony DeMarco and gloves from the very first fight he saw, a 1999 match between Vinny Pazienza and Bay Stater Dana Rosenblatt. But the collection is far from finished—especially with the Floyd Mayweather-Manny Pacquiao battle looming on May 2. "I don't have Mayweather's autograph yet," DePasquale says. "But I have enough space for two more gloves up in the right corner."



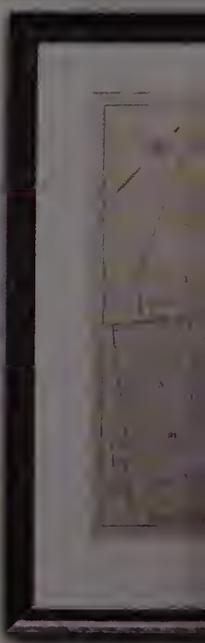
Thinking Inside the Box

"I've loved boxes for just as long as I can remember," says Joanne Rossman, who started collecting them as a child to house her dimes and pennies. Now the Roslindale gift shop owner's collection includes many hand-painted and papier-mâché specimens as well as a leather-covered writing desk box she believes may have been used by a Civil War field officer—a special find for the avid letter writer. But Rossman doesn't play favorites, preferring to see her prized possessions displayed together. "When you stack one on top of the other...they whisper secrets, they tell a story, they reflect off of one another," she says. "I just think they're magical objects. They're where you can keep your secrets and your extra set of napkins."

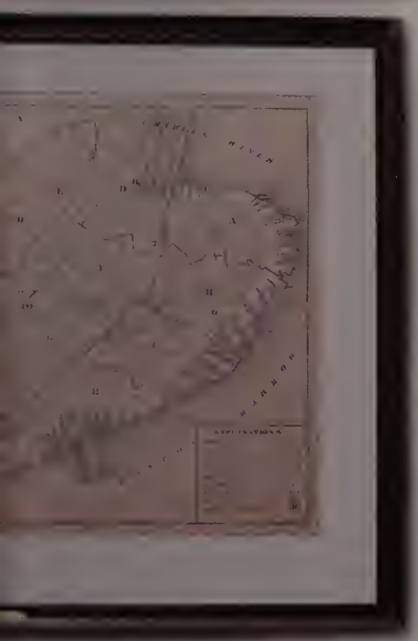


Hat Tricks

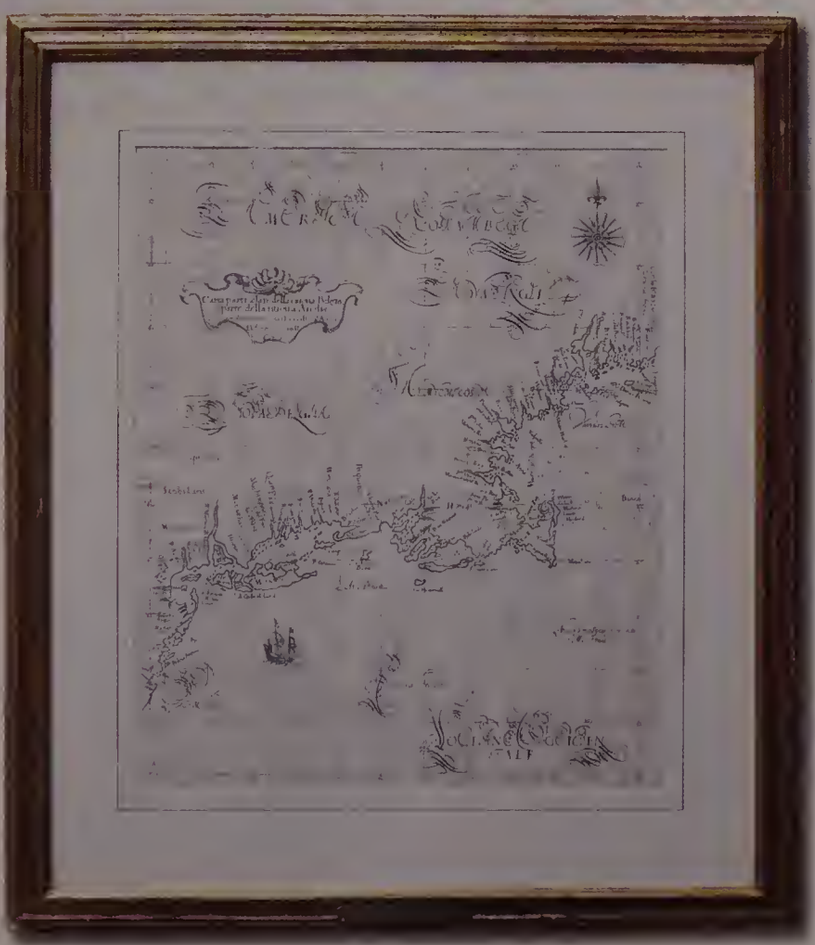
A glance at Celtics big man Kelly Olynyk's hat collection offers a quick history of the 24-year-old's life. Some hats bear the Canadian maple leaf, repping his north-of-the-border heritage. There's one from the Toronto Raptors, his favorite boyhood team, plus a couple from his college team, the Gonzaga Bulldogs. But he's Boston-based now, so there are hats from all the local pro teams, as well as multiple Celtics hats—including one from the 2014 NBA All-Star weekend he participated in as a rookie. Olynyk started his collection in college thanks to roommate Sam Dower Jr., who gave him a red Twin Cities hat. It's since grown to dozens of hats, including his go-to Mitchell & Ness pigeon cap. He jokes that he feels naked without something covering his shoulder-length locks, but admits he can't quite wear a hat everywhere he'd like: "I would play in one if they let us."



NEW ENGLAND



NOVA BELGICA
PARS



A Sense of Direction

The late Norman Leventhal began amassing antique maps in his 50s, a fitting venture for the real estate developer who was himself instrumental in shaping the city's landscape, from Rowes Wharf to Post Office Square. Featuring pieces dating as far back as the late 15th century, it includes maps from explorers like Capt. John Smith and cartographer Jean de Beaurain and showcases the changing New England coast and Boston's expansion around the Shawmut Peninsula. The philanthropist died earlier this month at the age of 97, but part of his collection, which grew to more than 400 works, can be seen in the Langham and the Boston Harbor Hotel as well as the Boston Public Library, home to the Norman B. Leventhal Map Center.

Sound Effects

"I sometimes describe myself as a roach motel of collectors: Everything checks in and nothing checks out," says David Bieber, whose archives span hundreds of thousands of objects—Disney toys, fine china, African masks, vintage clothes and photos, and much, much more. "I came to Boston for school and was opened to the magic world of yard sales and the Revere Drive-In flea market," recalls Bieber, who went looking for albums but discovered a panoply of pop culture. He began his career as the music director of WBUR and spent two decades as director of special projects at the Phoenix Media/Communications Group, so many treasures reflect his love of music, from radios to picture discs to posters, some of which grace the walls of the Fenway's Verb Hotel. He's also collected humbler mementos of a golden age of rock: tickets, backstage passes and buttons, which served as small but powerful "badges of identity," he explains. "Even something like the Stiff badge might get you entry into the club if the gatekeeper at the door was willing to look the other way."

Swooning for Spoons

"As a cook, you are always on the search for great spoons," says Renae Connolly, "one that makes the perfect quenelle, one that swooshes like a champ." But ever since a visit to an Amsterdam cookware shop during her honeymoon, the Cafe ArtScience pastry chef has looked for striking spoons off the clock, too. "Staring at a wall of gorgeous little spoons, I suddenly felt the urge to have them all," Connolly recalls. "From then on I've made it a point to find a tiny spoon in every new place we visit." Her collection includes everything from a bone-and-shell spoon a friend brought back from Japan to an antique hammered silver spoon that's her go-to for late-night ice cream noshing. Such finds helped inspire the Cambridge eatery's single-bite "Tiny Spoon" desserts, like the PB&J, featuring peanut butter mousse with Concord grape gel, peanut praline, caramelized brioche and grape foam. But the most petite specimens don't make it to the restaurant. "The really, really tiny ones, they're mostly fun to use at home."

On the Write Track

Calligrapher Pier Gustafson owns some 3,000 fountain pens, but he doesn't keep them under glass. These are functional tools that can be found in his pocket or on his desk at his Somerville studio. "Some are valuable, some are not very valuable, but almost every pen in my collection has a really nice nib," he says, noting that he favors pens made before 1960 and will even buy ones with teeth marks if they'll work well in an artist's hand.

Gustafson started his collection as a college senior in the late '70s after he heard a pen shop from his native Minneapolis featured on All Things Considered. He went from loyal customer to collector, eventually purchasing the entire stock of pens and parts and becoming a resource for fellow enthusiasts. "I was referred to as the Pen God," he says, "because it was magic that I could just open a drawer and find what they wanted."

Radio Activity

Mari Quirk has spent the past 30 years styling sets, and her Boston prop house is home to everything from lawn ornaments to mannequins—and a host of radios, including a 1945 Crosley American Overseas she purchased when hired to style historic tabletops in the late '80s. Describing herself as a "visual collector," Quirk is drawn to their design—especially that of American brands like RCA and Arvin—as well as their historical significance. "In 1979, my dad gave me an old console radio. As he installed it in the living room, he said, 'Oh the stories it could tell!' " For Quirk too, they're portals that can transport her to another era, be it the days of Roosevelt's fireside chats or her own past, as when she happened upon a 1956 green portable Motorola—the exact same model her aunt had given to her as a girl.

Keyed Up

Composing some new public art

AH, THE SWEET SOUNDS of spring: Birds are chirping and keys are click-clacking—at least in Union Square Plaza, where Free Verse kicks off on May 2. The ArtsUnion event will have four vintage typewriters set up for public use, and poet Julie Ann Otis will be on hand to give pro tips for your haiku, love letter, tall tale or other impromptu masterpiece, which will be shared at the onsite Type.Tack.Take board. It's just one of the happenings being staged for the spring edition of ArtWeek Boston, the biannual extravaganza featuring a Pulp Fiction-inspired dinner at Treats on Washington, a literary tour of the Omni Parker House, an a capella concert at the Privateer Rum Distillery and more than 120 other creative experiences. Check out the full lineup and get inspired May 1-10. / Jacqueline Houton

Free Verse runs from 2 to 7 pm on May 2, 9 and 17 in Union Square Plaza. ArtWeek Boston runs May 1–10 at venues throughout Greater Boston. artweekboston.org

PUPPY LOVE Many people would rather not relive their awkward teenage years. But in embracing and exploring the tumultuous years of adolescence, director Fernando Eimbcke has found his cinematic sweet spot. In his latest film, Club Sandwich, a thick-as-thieves mother and son, Paloma and Héctor, are pushed apart by a blossoming romance between Paloma's no-longer-so-little boy and the spunky Jazmín during summer vacation. Playing at the Harvard Film Archive on April 27, the film closes out a series on the Mexican filmmaker's work and features a visit from Eimbcke himself. And be sure to catch Eimbcke's other teen angst-induced flicks, Lake Tahoe and Duck Season, screening on April 24-27. / Hannah Landers

Cinderella ★★★ Disney guaranteed audiences would show up for director Kenneth Branagh's live-action remake of their 1950 animated hit by preceding it with a 7-minute mini-sequel to the 2013 animated smash Frozen. But like most follow-ups, this short is a letdown. So, how nice that the main event is such a pleasant surprise. While not a musical retelling (sure to disappoint some Disneyphiles), it's nevertheless a worthy tribute. Starring Downton Abbey's Lily James as the would-be princess, this latest in Disney's recent spate of flesh-and-blood reconfigurations of its animated classics features a standout performance by Cate Blanchett as a more modern interpretation of Cinderella's stepmother, Lady Tremaine. Unsurprisingly, she attempts to stop her stepdaughter from slipping her perfectly fitting foot inside the famed glass slipper and winning the heart of her Prince Charming (Game of Thrones' Richard Madden). What is surprising, however, is that Tremaine is the only woman in the kingdom not to try on the crystalline pump. A cultured woman hoping to provide stability for her family, and she doesn't even try to claim a place as the new queen? This is a fairy tale! (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Clouds of Sils Maria ★★★ 1/2 You may not know his name, but know this: Olivier Assayas is one of our greatest living directors. The 60-year-old Frenchman continues to build upon an amazing filmography seen by few in the U.S. with his latest, a challenging drama about acting that comments on celebrity, gossip culture and young, overprivileged starlets. Talky to a fault, it features spectacular acting turns by Oscar winner Juliette Binoche as Maria Enders, an aging actress just past the peak of her international career, and Kristen Stewart as her personal assistant, Valentine. That's right, Twilight's mopey brunette is one of the film's many sly delights, offering a meta-commentary on her own persona in a production that recalls Bergman's chamber dramas, more specifically—and fittingly—Persona. Don't laugh: Stewart became the first American to ever win a Best Actress César (France's Oscar) with this performance, which builds upon her recent criminally unheralded work in Still Alice and the little-seen Camp X-Ray. But this is Binoche's show. As Maria's relationship with Valentine increasingly echoes that of the leads in the play she's rehearsing, Assayas comments no longer, allowing us to interpret his masterfully ambiguous ending. (At Kendall Square.)

Danny Collins ★1/2 "The following is kind of based on a true story," reads the onscreen text at the start of this maudlin mess of a movie, before it's qualified with the words "a little bit." Al Pacino embarrasses himself more than usual as the title character in the directorial debut of screenwriter Dan Fogelman, who pulls double duty as writer of this shameless treacle, which follows his script for Last Vegas, a film that offered crummy roles for no less than Robert De Niro, Michael Douglas, Kevin Kline and Morgan Freeman. Fogelman's nothing if not consistent. Danny Collins is an aging 1970s rocker who wears a girdle while croaking his signature hit, "Hey, Baby Doll," which sounds like a song Neil Diamond might have come up with, but nothing at all like something penned by the inspiration for Collins, British folk singer Steve Tilston. Like Collins, though, Tilston did discover a handwritten fan letter from John Lennon nearly 40 years after it was sent, but it's here that reality ends and Fogelman's schmaltzy fiction begins, prompting Collins to "embark on a heartfelt journey," according to the press notes. Don't believe it. Not even a little bit. (At Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Divergent Series: Insurgent ★★ This dystopian bore based on the middle installment of Veronica Roth's young adult novels once again stars Shailene Woodley as Katniss...err, Tris, and Theo James as, um, Four, placing them in the ruins of what had been Chicago. Tris, her brother Caleb (Ansel Elgort) and Four have been hiding from Jeanine (Kate Winslet), but when the villain's trigger-happy troops find them, the trio manage to escape on a speeding train, with Four leaping in front of it, like Superman. And why not? Even though the Divergent series has been packaged as a progressive girl-power showcase, this film backpedals on muscular feminism as it shifts the action focus onto Four, who saves Tris more than once. We discover that Tris' mother died in the previous movie not only protecting her daughter, but also trying to keep a totemic LED-bedazzled box (appearing nowhere in the novel) from falling into Jeanine's hands—which it does, anyway. Caleb helpfully tells Tris (and confused readers of the book) that it contains a Very Important Message from the Founders—which can only be accessed via Tris and her superb virtual reality video game skills. Or something. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Ex Machina ★★ 1/2 Many viewers of this science fiction thriller, the directing debut of Alex Garland, writer of Danny Boyle's 28 Days Later and Sunshine, will mispronounce the title of this movie, oblivious to its origins. This is probably for the best, since Garland's script isn't nearly as smart as he seems to think it is. Ostensibly, this is a film about the most advanced artificial intelligence ever created. Too bad writer/director Spike Jonze explored this concept far more effectively two years ago with his Oscar-winning script for Her, which featured a man falling in love with the operating system in his cellphone. That OS was voiced by an unseen Scarlett Johansson, while here, the AI is visibly embodied by Alicia Vikander as Ava. Caleb Smith (Domhnall Gleeson), a programmer at an Internet-search giant, has been brought to the private mountain estate of the company's brilliant CEO, billionaire recluse Nathan Bateman (Oscar Isaac), to evaluate Ava's human qualities, but is there more going on here? Sadly, yes, and the mystifying conclusion leaves you yearning for the halcyon days of murderous AI like 2001's HAL. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Focus ★★1/2 This love story between two professional liars and cheats might leave you feeling conned, especially after such a promising first half. Will Smith brings a lot of charm to his role of master thief Nicky, but it's Margot Robbie as Jess, his new protege, who steals the movie. Co-writers and co-directors Glenn Ficarra and John Requa (I Love You Phillip Morris) lay most of their cards out when they place Nicky in a car with Jess as Noel Harrison sings "The Windmills of Your Mind" on the radio. This Oscar-winning song was the theme of 1968's The Thomas Crown Affair—and Ficarra and Requa wish their movie could be half as entertaining as the Boston-set heist classic. But for a while, it is. Nicky and Jess meet-cute in New York, and their week-long con games/love affair in New Orleans lead up to the Super Bowl. A tension-filled sequence at the big game finds the two in an escalating gambling match with B.D. Wong's Liyuan, and the payoff is huge. But then, abruptly, the words "Three years later..." appear onscreen, and you feel like your pocket's been picked. (At Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Furious 7 ★★★ Before the title has even appeared onscreen in the seventh installment of The Fast and the Furious franchise, Jason Statham's Deckard Shaw has single-handedly destroyed much of a London hospital in his quest for vengeance against the people responsible for gravely injuring his little brother, Fast & Furious 6's baddie. His targets? The close-knit team of Dominic Toretto (Vin Diesel), who's first seen involving himself in a "Race War," which is more innocent than it sounds (this isn't Get Hard, people). Returning for one final ride is the late Paul Walker as Brian O'Conner. Walker, who died in an unrelated car wreck during production, is nevertheless introduced behind the wheel...of a minivan. Brian's now a dedicated dad, fitting with the series' sentimental focus on "family." Watching his son hurl toy cars, he tells the boy, "Cars don't fly." Except when they do. Whether dropped from planes, jumping off mountains or driven between two skyscrapers, Furious 7's exotic vehicles spend much of their time airborne. Switching lanes from horror to action, director James Wan (Saw, Insidious and The Conjuring) gets up to speed quickly, hardly letting off the gas as he steers Walker toward a graceful ride into the sunset. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Get Hard ★1/2 This Will Ferrell and Kevin Hart vehicle has taken a lot of knocks for its perceived racism and homophobia, but what's most offensive is how few jokes land, given what should have been a slam-dunk. Put these two side-by-side in the frame together, and Ferrell's oversized doughiness and Hart's diminutive feistiness could surpass Ferrell's delightful pairing with Mark Wahlberg in The Other Guys, a farce that knew what to do with its leads. That 2010 picture was directed by Ferrell's longtime comedy partner, Adam McKay, a man who knows how to frame a scene. Alas, McKay steps into a producing role here, allowing co-writer Etan Cohen (screenwriter behind 2006's Idiocracy and 2008's Tropic Thunder) to take the director's chair, and the first-timer fails to use the mismatched physiques of his two performers to any real advantage. Ferrell plays a wrongfully convicted millionaire investment banker who enlists the man who washes his car (Hart) to help him prepare for life behind bars, presuming that the black man must have done time. Many flaccid prison rape jokes follow, and although Cohen does have Ferrell bench-press Hart like a barbell, it's light lifting in a leaden satire. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Kingsman: The Secret Service ★★★ Matthew Vaughn reinvigorated Marvel Comics' X-Men for the big screen in 2011's X-Men: First Class, a period piece where he demonstrated an affinity for the swinging '60s, in addition to the command of action filmmaking and editing he'd displayed in 2010's Kick-Ass, his violent, entertaining deconstruction of the modern superhero movie, based on writer Mark Millar's comic book series. Now, Vaughn and regular collaborator Jane Goldman have freely adapted another Millar comic book, 2012's The Secret Service. Although set in the present, this affectionately winking, post-modern take on spy films aims squarely at the James Bond franchise, specifically the 1970s movies, with Oscar winner Colin Firth tapping into his inner Roger Moore as gentleman spy Harry Hart. He recruits "Eggsy" (newcomer Taron Egerton), who was Olympic material before he dropped out of the Royal Marines and into a life of petty crime. "The suit is the modern gentleman's armor," Hart tells the lad, and he's not kidding—the designer suits Eggsy's outfitted with are as bulletproof as his ammunition-firing umbrella, and they'll be needed for all the over-the-top action and carnage ahead. If Bond's upper lip has grown too stiff for you, Eggsy's new breed of spy is bound to raise a few eyebrows. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Second Best Exotic Marigold Hotel ★★ Director John Madden won't be winning any Oscars for this follow-up to his 2011 hit, The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel. However, he and his screenwriter, Ol Parker, should be given credit for their honesty—their sequel certainly is the second best in this series. Without a novel to work from (the first film was based on Deborah Moggach's These Foolish Things), Parker builds his script around the goodwill that audiences have for these characters. However, the absence of Tom Wilkinson's Graham is deeply felt, and bulking up the supporting roles of returning cast members—Ronald Pickup and Diana Hardcastle as Norman and Carol, Celia Imrie as Madge—can't make up for this hole, especially when they're provided with sitcom-style plots. MVP Maggie Smith provides the film's backbone as Muriel; as the newly installed co-manager of the hotel, alongside Dev Patel's Sonny, she's the glue that holds everything together, even if few of the pieces quite fit. Judi Dench and Bill Nighy also bring their immeasurable charms back to their roles of Evelyn and Douglas, but new hotel guests Guy (Richard Gere) and Lavinia (Tamsin Greig) feel like exactly what this film is: filler. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

True Story ★★1/2 British theater director Rupert Goold makes his feature debut with this character study, which he's adapted from disgraced New York Times reporter Michael Finkel's memoir, and his stage roots show. Michael (Jonah Hill) appears mostly in two locations: the Montana home he shares with his wife Jill (Felicity Jones), and inside the visitation room at the Oregon jail where accused murderer Christian Longo (James Franco) awaits trial. Michael seeks redemption in writing a book about Longo, a man who used his name and identity to evade an FBI manhunt. While the relationship and dialogue that develops between these two recalls Capote, Bennett Miller's superior 2005 drama was anchored by a superb Oscar-winning performance by Philip Seymour Hoffman. Funnyman Hill does well with another dramatic role, but Franco fails to rise to the occasion. It's Jones, however, who truly shines. And while I doubt there's much truth to Jill's contrived scene opposite Christian, it's nevertheless a well-written one in which she performs masterfully. Unfortunately, when the information appearing in a printed onscreen coda is more interesting than the events depicted during the previous 95 minutes, that's another truth that's hard to deny. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

While We're Young ★★★ Noah Baumbach's eighth film as a writer/director opens with some pointed onscreen quotes from Henrik Ibsen's The Master Builder, establishing the animosity those in middle age exhibit toward the younger generation. Documentary filmmaker Josh (Ben Stiller, star of Baumbach's acerbic 2010 film Greenberg) and his wife/producer Cornelia (Naomi Watts) are a middle-aged couple who open their door to nascent documentarian Jamie (Adam Driver, from Baumbach's last film, 2012's Frances Ha) and ice cream maker Darby (Amanda Seyfried), a much younger couple who crash Josh's continuing-education class. Subtly humorous, naturalistic dialogue lifts Baumbach's best pictures past many of his contemporaries', but it's when he gets bogged down in plot machinations that his movies can sometimes suffer—and there's a surfeit of plot here. Duplicities pile up, as do resentments, but this film isn't Greenberg. The honesty can still be bitter at times, but there's a newfound sweetness that's crept into Baumbach's last two pictures. With the passage of time comes the realization that the cruelty of life doesn't have to sting so hard when tempered with the love of a partner. That, and a good bottle of Scotch to share. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Woman in Gold ★★ While the titular Gustav Klimt painting, referred to as "the Mona Lisa of Austria," is a masterpiece, director Simon Curtis' film about an octogenarian woman's fight to reclaim the famous portrait of her aunt is anything but. The maudlin script by first-time screenwriter Alexi Kaye Campbell doesn't do any favors for Helen Mirren or Ryan Reynolds, the wildly mismatched actors who portray the elderly Jewish woman, Maria Altmann, and her inexperienced young lawyer, Randy Schoenberg, as they fight the Austrian establishment to reclaim the artwork that Nazis stole from her Viennese family. A flashback structure finds Altmann portrayed in her younger years by a surprisingly credible Mirren stand-in, Orphan Black star Tatiana Maslany, but her flight to America alongside her husband (Max Irons) is presented in a hackneyed thriller fashion that cheapens the power of the story, which isn't helped by the paint-by-numbers screenplay that puts as much emphasis on Schoenberg's family as it does Altmann's. True, his grandfather was a famed Austrian composer whose family also fled the Nazis, but Schoenberg's domestic and workplace dramas have little of the resonance of Altmann's larger story. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

TRAILBLAZERS In 2010, wandering artist Ben Schneider dubbed himself Lord Huron and wrote three atmospherie folk EPs from the banks of his Miehigan hometown. Five years later, he's expanded his solo projeet into a full band eomposed of childhood friends, now based in Los Angeles. Thc indie-folk outfit's new record Strange Trails pieks up right where Western-adventurc-inspired debut Lonesome Dreams left off, as is evident in their catehy single "Fool for Love," a plucky, feel-good folk-rock tune with sweet harmonies and unmistakable Elvis vibes. Bow down on May 2, when Lord Huron plays at the Paradise Roek Club. / Grace Rasmus

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

CREATURE FEATURE Butterflies, bunnies and birds—oh my! Starting in May, Hunt Slonem spotlights the furry and feathered friends for which he's best known. The neo-expressionist, who houses as many as 100 birds at his Manhattan studio, renders his muses in bold hues and textured oil paint, scored with his signature crosshatch style seen in more than 100 museums worldwide. He'll bring new work to DTR Modern, where he's been the only artist given an annual show since the gallery's opening 10 years ago. Scamper on over to see the colorful menagerie, on display through the first week of June. / Hannah Landers

PICTURE IMPERFECT

A picture is worth a thousand words—and sometimes even more drama. Such was the case for a 16th-century portrait credited to Raphael that the Museum of Fine Arts acquired in 1969. Before long, questions of provenance and authenticity turned a would-be career highlight for then-director Perry Rathbone into a scandal that led to his resignation. Now, more than 40 years later, his daughter Belinda Rathbone is reopening the case with her new book The Boston Raphael, which taps primary sources to shed new light on the story. Brush up on your art history on April 27, when the author comes to Brookline Booksmith. / Kyle Grace Mills

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 playlist, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

IT'S THE LITTLE THINGS...

Royale was transformed into an R-rated bathhouse/burlesque hall for climACTS! WET, the annual fundraiser for The Theater Offensive (and one of the sexiest LGBT parties of the year). Go-go dancers in barely there hot pants gyrated on plinths, squeezing wet sponges over their heads while Jello shots shaped like genitalia were served by scantily clad servers. As one guest put it: "Nice shorts he's almost wearing."

The A-gays and their allies were out in full force, among them: Southern gentleman Davant Scarborough, design whiz Stephen Martyak, real estate mack daddy David Goldman, the uber-suave Jacques Abatto, stylish stylist Adam Oliveri, Billy Dee Williams impersonator Arnold Sapenter, Company One co-founder Summer Williams, publishing poobah Jeff Coakley, the devastatingly handsome twosome of Joel Benjamin and Dan Norman, theater impresario Eve Alpern, hot ginge Neill Kovash, sexy cue ball Ernesto Galan, committee member Meg Bruton, the unfailingly upbeat Karl McLaurin, distinguished antiquarian Lance Brisbois, bespectacled hipster Adam Leveille, and several of the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence, including Lida Christ, who introduced herself to someone, whose response was "Funny—people call me Lida Caine."

Aside from all the gratuitous eye candy, the entertainment included performance artist Octavio Campos, music by DJ Brent Covington, two impossibly jacked acrobats, who caused more than a few palpitations, and an appearance by gorgeous trans actress/singer Alexandra Billings, who caused more than a few more palpitations.

The live auction, meanwhile, was emceed by corn-fed cutie David Brown, who stripped off his tuxedo to reveal a wetsuit underneath, prompting one guest to say, "I think that's taking safe sex a little too far."

Lest it all sound completely louche, the following exchange did take place at the bar: "Where's your husband?"

"Church."

All in all, an all-inclusive night, and the award for ultra-P.C. sensitivity went to whoever thought to cover the men's and ladies' room doors with hand-written signs that said, "Non-gender-specific restroom."

FORGET LIBERTÉ AND EGALITÉ. IT WAS A FRATERNITÉ PARTY!

The only thing missing was the Minotaur at the French Cultural Center's Bal du Labyrinthe, which transformed the three-story Back Bay townhouse into a sexy, mazelike party space with a surprise at every turn and a bar in every corner.

Francophiles, Francophones and a handful of genuine French folk put on playful black-tie attire to dance the night away to Paris DJ Paul Beri and NYC DJ Tchotchke.

Recognizable amid the swirl: the Pepsodent-bright Julia Brasor, smooth operator Gustavo Quiroga, femme fatale Gina DeWolfe, ski buddies Rob Bagshaw and Jeff Merselis, art connoisseur Anna Bursaux, helicopter enthusiast Christian Bailey, child fashion prodigy Luke Aaron, Beacon Hill chatelaine Suzanne Eliastam and painter extraordinaire Jordan Piantedosi, doing the most elaborate tattoos in the most unmentionable of places.

"It's a vodka emergency!" was actually said without irony, and each room had its own Daedalus-like touches—from a schoolmarmish woman asking ridiculously obscure riddles to projections riffing on Greek myths. Because the French have good make-out music, there's little doubt that the shadowy library stacks and a broom closet or two were used for a bit of canoodling, and regardless of what language was being spoken, everything sounded utterly charmante.

However, the best proof that it was an epic evening was the late-night arrival of Boston's finest, who expressed some concern over the floors being able to handle the dancing. In other words, the French know how to party. ◆

WISH YOU WERE THERE!

I LOVE TO TRAVEL, BUT I'M A TERRIBLE flier, the kind of white-knuckled passenger who reacts as though constant hyper-vigilance is a key part of what keeps a plane airborne. So it's nice to be reminded how many enticing destinations we have within driving distance—and our Getaway issue offers plenty of inspiration on that front. Carley D. Thornell asks local toques for their picks of restaurants worth a road trip, while Scott Kearnan gets a sneak peek at seven intriguing New England hotels slated to open in the months ahead, from an island hideaway to literary lodgings in a former newspaper building that already have this word nerd geeking out. Elsewhere, I check in at a Manhattan hotel and check out some Broadway shows for our Escape Artist column, and Alayna Eberhart rounds up some colorful totes for your next Cape escape in our Style page. Speaking of resort towns, one serves as the setting for The Affair, the TV show currently tapping the talents of cover subject, Boston native Maura Tierney, whom Jonathan Soroff interviews in this issue. Meanwhile, Meghan Kavanaugh chats with well-traveled photographer Brian Skerry, who's spent more than 10,000 hours underwater capturing marine marvels around the globe. Bon voyage.

THE LIFE AQUATIC

BRIAN SKERRY

WHALE OF A TIME: One of Brian Skerry's trips found him hanging out with southern right whales near the Auckland Islands.

Under the Sea

Brian Skerry grew up wondering about life beneath the waves off the shore of his native Bay State. "I always wanted to be an explorer. I thought I wanted to be an astronaut or exploring jungles, but there was definitely something about the ocean that really spoke to me," says the National Geographic photographer and New England Aquarium explorer in residence. "It just seemed like a place that was ripe for discovery that really spoke to my soul." His latest journey, chronicled in the magazine's May issue, spanned two years and nine locations, including Honduras, Argentina and the Bahamas, where he shot never-before-photographed foraging and recreation activities of dolphins. "It's been described as a sort of alien intelligence here on Earth. We really don't know how much they know. What are they doing with these giant brains?" Skerry says, recalling a game of "catch" he caught on film. "Although they're mammals and air breathers and sort of related to us, they really are almost this parallel intelligence in the ocean that we're only just beginning to understand."

That quest for understanding takes Skerry, who has contributed to National Geographic for 17 years, on the road up to nine months a year. While he counts Japan and the Azores among his favorite destinations, his most memorable trip was to New Zealand's Auckland Islands. On assignment to compare southern right whales with their North Atlantic counterparts, he ended up in a dive suit at the bottom of the ocean taking photos while creatures "as big as a city bus" swam around him with a gentle curiosity. "I've sort of become addicted to extraordinary experiences... to having these magical encounters," he says. "It is that sort of wanderlust, but it's also knowing that the potential exists to see things that most people might never get to see, and to tell these stories." / Meghan Kavanaugh

TIPS FROM A FREQUENT FLYER

- Pay attention to layovers: "Even though I'm so pressed for time these days, I've learned to really start booking every single detail of my itinerary to make sure I've got time between connections."
- Save ticket stubs: "I just had a huge trip in South Africa—it was like 12,000 miles that wasn't credited to my account. And the only way I got those miles credited to my account was because I had saved my ticket stub, my boarding pass, and had the actual information that they were requesting, including the ticket number, which you can only find on that ticket."
- Pack smart: "The truth of the matter is so many times my assignments have me out on boats at sea for weeks at a time or at a beach at the edge of the jungle in Indonesia for three weeks, and breakfast is a PowerBar and a malaria pill. I have to take a lot of stuff that I need. I took a little French press so that I can have a coffee, and I took a bunch of freeze-dried meals...just so I could have some of the civilized comforts of home."

ON THE FLY

TACO TIME

A NEW MEXICAN SPOT PARKS IN CENTRAL SQUARE.

Naco Taco
297 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
(617-945-1548)
nacacentral.com

A NUMBER OF LOCAL MOBILE KITCHENS have spawned brick-and-mortar restaurants during the past few years. But a food trailer serving a brick-and-mortar? That will be a first when Naco Taco opens in early May.

The food trailer houses a fully operational kitchen that's attached to the Central Square restaurant. It has three large windows that open to the front patio, a space adorned with string lights, set off from the street by large planters and roomy enough to fit more than 80 customers. The outdoor setup is meant to channel the food-cart scene that's popular in Portland, Oregon, and other cities.

"In a lot of places, food trucks are able to park on empty lots," says co-owner Alex Tannenbaum. "But there's not really any empty lots in the greater Boston area."

The scene inside Naco extends the casual vibe, with cement floors, exposed brick walls, an eclectic mash of tables and chairs seating more than 100, large neon signs and even a few arcade machines in the back corner. And while there might be a carefree energy as the food arrives on sheet pans covered with paper, rest assured the menu came together under the careful eye of consulting chef Michael Scelfo.

"It's all really true to Latin flavor profiles and Mexican street food," says Scelfo, chef/owner of Harvard Square's Alden & Harlow. "We're taking the most classic ideas and presenting them with my own little twist. That's what I've always done with food. I don't want people to sit down and say, 'This isn't a taco.'"

The seven varieties of tacos ($4 each) will range from adventurous picks such as cured lamb-belly or pig's head to a crispy chicken with fermented kale, all on a housemade tortilla. (A photo of them already elicited a "damn" from Gwyneth Paltrow on Instagram.) Tortas ($9-$12) will play with some of the same proteins as the tacos, such as crispy smelts, and serve them on a housemade pickled corn telera bread. Then there are the salsas and cremas ($3 each) in varieties like burnt pineapple and avocado tomatillo.

The fun flavors are expected to carry over to the beverage program, which is beer-and-wine only but features six micheladas, giving beer the cocktail treatment in concoctions such as the roasted corn, which features charred poblano, tecate and a corn powder salt. An entire program of micheladas is one more thing that Scelfo hopes will set Naco Taco apart from other Mexican spots, long before they experiment with dessert (choco tacos!) and, possibly, late-night offerings and breakfast.

"There's a lot of taquerias in town, but there's a lot of parity between them. What we're doing is a fresh take on that," Scelfo says before reflecting again on the food-trailer kitchen. "I'm jealous of it. It's bigger than my kitchen line at Alden."

PAPA SHOWS RAZZMATAZZ

COME TO PAPA: The Burlington Papa Razzi is the first to get a makeover.

FOR 25 YEARS, THE REGIONAL PAPA Razzi chain of restaurants has been a dependable purveyor of tasty—if less than cutting-edge—Italian food. More than a year after it was bought by Newport Harbor Corporation, however, it's undergoing a rebranding and renovation to morph into Papa Razzi Metro. Recently unveiled at the Burlington location, PR Metro includes an Italian menu from culinary arts director Kevin DiLibero that's more in line with modern trends.

The new menu includes Neapolitan pizzas (authenticated by the Associazione Verace Pizza Napoletana) such as the forest mushroom pie with truffle-scented ricotta and the black fig pizza with dolce gorgonzola, prosciutto and baby arugula. A full menu of housemade desserts is available, but the sbrisolona is a true hit, in more ways than one. The giant crumbly cookie is made from almonds and cornmeal; when your waiter gives its center one smack, it breaks into dozens of small pieces to be enjoyed with a pick from the extensive coffee program or an Italian spirit such as housemade figcello and limoncello.

The dramatic overhaul by designer Peter Niemitz includes an interior that boasts private dining upstairs, a marble-topped salumi bar, an open kitchen and a custom-made Marra Forni oven. The outside terrace has its own bar and extensive partially covered patio seating.

Within the next two years, the five other Papa Razzi locations—in Wellesley, Concord, Boston, Framingham and Cranston, Rhode Island—will be converted into Papa Razzi Metros. And while Newport Harbor Corporation may be an unfamiliar name to Bostonians, it has quite a track record with its Newport Restaurant Group in Rhode Island, including standouts such as 22 Bowen's and the Castle Hill Inn, a Relais & Chateaux property in Newport.

Drink of the Moment: EL RUSTICO

STEP RIGHT UP: Most drinks don't come with an instruction manual, but this multistep cocktail is worth the effort. As Todd Maul puts it, "You can get a Manhattan anywhere"—or in this case, a margarita ($14)—"so why would you come here?" For one, hospitality: The staff is happy to walk guests through the process. And originality for another. Here's a breakdown of Maul's unique take on the Cinco de Mayo classic. (1) Pastry chef Renae Connolly bakes a sugar cap with bitters and jalapeno. (2) After breaking the cap, guests inhale vaporized tequila, not a gimmick but a reimagined garnish. "It doesn't have to be a piece of fruit," Maul says, comparing the vapor to an amuse bouche that preps the palate. (3) A mixture of tequila, agave and Fidencio Unico mezcal flash-infused with urfa chile is poured over the ice cubes.

TASTE SENSATIONS: "This whole drink is the idea of having bright and spicy coexisting in your mouth," Maul explains. The Turkish pepper and mezcal both have a soft, slow burn to them. As you sip, ice cubes made of lime juice and orange Clément shrub slowly change the taste of the drink.

DOWN TO A SCIENCE: If this seems meticulously planned, it is. From the choice of glass—a snifter so hands influence the temperature and aromatics—to the rate at which the ice cubes melt (eight and a half minutes), nothing's overlooked. Maul traces his approach to a lesson he learned while studying furniture making at the North Bennet Street School. "If my ideas aren't filtered through me and my experience, I'm really just making bad replications. That's how you should look at booze," he explains. "You should be able to sit in a bar completely unbeknownst to you, and the style of drink I make, you should be able to pick it out." / Sarah Hagman

OFF THE CUFF

New York Fashion Week creator Fern Mallis has brought her 92nd Street Y interview series to shelves with her recently released book, Fashion Lives. And she'll give audiences the scoop about her chats with household names, from Tom Ford to Bill Cunningham, when she sits down with curator Michelle Finamore on May 13 at the MFA. / Sarah Hagman

MS. NICE GUY: Fern Mallis believes in the merits of style and substance

WHAT ARE YOU HOPING READERS WILL GET OUT OF FASHION LIVES? Well, I'm hoping that they will appreciate and understand what it takes to be successful in the fashion industry and that they will get to know these people better as human beings and not just a name on a label.

YOU'VE WORKED VERY CLOSELY WITH YOUR INTERVIEW SUBJECTS; SOME ARE FRIENDS. DID THEY EVER REVEAL ANYTHING THAT YOU DIDN'T KNOW ABOUT THEM? I mean, all of them. From Calvin [Klein] talking about his addictions [to] Michael Kors sharing funny stories about starting a dry cleaning business at summer camp because he didn't like the way the clothes were coming back from the laundry. You know, all sorts of things. Betsey Johnson, I never knew she was a Phi Beta Kappa at Syracuse. Andre Leon Talley shared that he got a birthday present from Karl Lagerfeld on his 50th birthday, and it was $50,000.

DO YOU HAVE ONE PIECE OF ADVICE FOR YOUNG PROFESSIONALS? My favorite advice to everybody starting out—and beyond—is to be nice. I think that that's underappreciated. It's important to stay true and humble. There are so many people doing everything in this world, so many designers trying to vie for that same piece of the business and relationships. And at the end of the day, you really want to work with the people that you like and who are nice. I find no reason to have to put up with people who are difficult or who think they're something more than they are. And I find nice generally wins out.

INTO THE WOOD

A CAMBRIDGE CARPENTER RECOUNTS HOW SHE TRADED TYPING FOR HAMMERING

HAMMER HEAD* by Nina MacLaughlin
Published by W. W. Norton & Company, 240 pages, $25

IT'S DARING ENOUGH TO LEAVE A ONCE-satisfying career. When the next step is into a completely unfamiliar field—where a measly 1.6 percent of pros share your gender—that's impressive. Former Boston Phoenix staffer Nina MacLaughlin did just that, trading the heady work of journalism for the muscular demands of carpentry, a transition chronicled in this lyrical memoir.

Dispirited by days increasingly spent clicking in the virtual world, MacLaughlin sought the granite solidity of the actual, responding to a Craigslist post for a carpenter's assistant. Mary, her new boss, patiently, tactfully instructs her on the use of screaming saws and specialized screwdrivers as they build stairways, closets and entire rooms. In one frightening moment, Mary gets stuck working halfway out a window; Nina has to laboriously haul her back in. On another day, they load and mix 2,560 pounds of cement. "Not bad for two chicks!" Mary sings out.

Such heavy lifting coexists with delicate handiwork: Sawing big pieces of wood demands the precision of sewing. MacLaughlin writes with equal care about the pleasures of her benevolent home invasions, which transform the surroundings and lives of strangers. Her work gives her a vivid feeling of power, and while she appreciates the difference between the abstraction of writing and the tangibility of her new trade, daily musings about the meanings of carpentry have kept her literary self alive.

FROM PAGE 200: But what appealed to me so much about carpentry work is how far it is from words. The zone of my brain that gets activated building bookshelves is a different one than the one that puts together sentences. And what a relief it can be, not having to worry about the right word, not having to think, over and over, is this the best way to say this? ◆

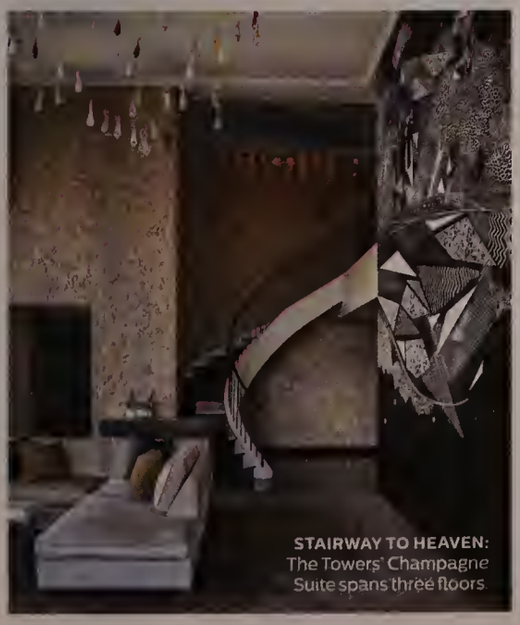
HEIGHT OF LUXURY

THE TOWERS AT THE NEW YORK PALACE OFFER ROOMS WITH A VIEW OF THE GOOD LIFE.

EVEN IF YOU'RE A FIRST-TIME VISITOR TO 455 Madison Avenue, you may find the courtyard's ornate iron gate and the lobby's sweeping staircase familiar. That's because the New York Palace has been a frequent film and TV backdrop, even serving as the home address of Serena van der Woodsen on Gossip Girl—but the storied Midtown spot was synonymous with luxury long before its prime time supporting role. In 1882, journalist-turned-railroad tycoon Henry Villard commissioned six grand townhouses surrounding a Renaissance-style courtyard modeled after Rome's Palazzo della Cancelleria. Nearly a century later, a 55-story tower was added, and the address became the home of the Helmsley Palace hotel, where millionaire Queen of Mean Leona Helmsley ruled for a decade, terrorizing staff until her sentencing for tax evasion. Rechristened the New York Palace, the property went on to wind up in the hands of—no joke—the Sultan of Brunei. Then in 2011, it was purchased by Northwood Investors, who undertook a $140 million renovation uniting Gilded Age glamour with modern opulence.



That's especially evident in the Towers, a hotel within a hotel with its own private reception, where flutes of Champagne await at check-in and the elevator stands ready to whisk you to the top 14 floors, home to 176 revamped rooms and suites—including jaw-droppers like the 5,000-square-foot Jewel Suite dreamed up by Martin Katz, featuring more than $1.5 million of the Beverly Hills jewelry designer's bling. But even the Towers' standard rooms can make you feel like a master of the universe. Decked in a gold-and-cream color scheme with lots of leather and marble, they boast opaque and sheer shades that descend with the touch of a button, glass showers with dual heads and Molton Brown toiletries, and stunning skyline views anchored by neighboring neo-Gothic marvel St. Patrick's Cathedral, currently under renovation and partly shrouded by scaffolding, but still welcoming both tourists and penitents.

In-room bartending and butler services are just a phone call away, but there are plenty of options for drinking downstairs. Abutting the lobby lounge is the clubby Tavern on 51, while tucked beneath the grand staircase is Trouble's Trust, a sultry cocktail bar dressed in red lacquer and leather and named for the pampered pooch to whom Leona bequeathed a $12 million trust fund. Specialty cocktails like the Queen of Mean—featuring local potables Breuckelen 77 New York wheat whiskey, Ginger Bee craft mixer, Red Jacket Orchards apple juice and Averell Damson gin—will run you a cool $19. Even more luxe is Rarities, the by-reservation-only salon limited to 25 imbibers at a time and stocked with cognacs and wines that date back to Villard's day. The ground-floor Pomme Palais bakery, meanwhile, offers light fare for an on-the-go breakfast or lunch, plus pain au chocolate and other sweets to work off at the eighth-floor fitness center. (You're fully forgiven if you skip the cardio in favor of an aromatic hot towel massage at the adjoining spa.)

The real playgrounds, of course, wait just beyond the courtyard: MoMA, Central Park, Fifth Avenue, Rockefeller Center and many more sights are within easy walking distance. So is Broadway, where Finding Neverland, the Diane Paulus-directed musical bred at the A.R.T. in Cambridge, recently made its debut. To celebrate, the hotel is offering a package with themed cocktails and cookies, the option of discounted tickets, a program signed by the entire cast and a phone greeting from Kelsey Grammer, who plays Captain Hook. Like your theater a little less G-rated? There are lots of new standouts this season, like comic-come-to-life Fun Home, a musical based on Alison Bechdel's graphic memoir of growing up in a funeral home and coming out to her closeted dad, who died soon after in what was likely a suicide; Something Rotten, a 16th-century-set musical about the making of a musical that spoofs familiar tropes from Broadway and the Bard; and Hand to God, a decidedly dark comedy in which a demonically possessed puppet gives voice to the id of a troubled teen at a Christian ministry. Expect extended puppet sex, a bit of gore, lots of laughs and questions on the function of faith that will linger on your walk back toward St. Pat's and your freshly turned-down bed at the Palace. ◆

RISIN' SWINE

TOWNSMAN BALANCES THE RUSTIC AND THE REFINED.

TOWNSMAN
120 Kingston St., Boston (617-993-0750)
townsmanboston.com

IF YOU HAD NOTICED THE MANY ACCOLADES accruing to chef/owner Matt Jennings of Providence restaurant Farmstead—three Beard Award near-misses for Best Chef Northeast, three wins at Cochon 555, endless write-ups in national food magazines—you might have asked, "Why can't we get players like that?" Luckily for Bostonians, Jennings closed Farmstead last year to open the new Townsman in a hundred-seat space at the edge of the Financial District. What he's doing there might just restore jaded food geeks' faith in shop-worn terms like "farm-to-table" and "snout-to-tail."

Out of the gate, Jennings excels at the venerable French and Italian traditions of curing, smoking, pickling and reshaping underused animal parts, especially from pigs. His New England charcuterie ($18 for two selections) is a pretty array of his own salumi, like delicate, well-marbled coppa and peppery, dense salami with fine bread-and-butter pickles, Kewpie-thickened biscuits and rustic mustard. Even more gorgeous is his house terrine board ($29), a dazzling assortment of pâtés, including dense, creamy duck-liver mousse, a country pâté of chicken, miso and carrot, a firmer, finer terrine of rabbit and hazelnuts, and a ferocious carmine blood-pudding mortadella. These alternate with carefully paired relishes (like cranberry/celery), pickles (of fennel, enoki and long beans), Concord grape jelly and candied nuts. American hams ($18 for two selections) showcase noteworthy Kentucky products like a wondrous melt-in-the-mouth lardo from Denham's Curehouse and a vivid prosciutto from Scott Hams.

Townsman devotes much energy to raw preparations, starting with perfect oysters ($18 for six) from nearby inlets like Katama, Pleasant Bay and Pemaquid. Yellowfin crudo ($16) nicely contrasts a sashimi-like cut of fish with the salty snap of chicharrones, counterpointed with tart grapefruit and mildly funky black garlic. Lamb crudo ($15) is elegantly plated as a narrow oblong of tartare bisecting a circular swirl of green harissa crowned with fresh mint and crisp sunchoke chips. Its refinement makes the conceptual flop of beef crudo ($15) more puzzling: It's unattractively spread thin across the plate, and its mild flavor and contrasting accents of confit egg yolk and gribiche are overwhelmed by the oil of housemade potato chips. Vegetables fare much better, shining in plates like the stunning fava crudo ($12), which bursts with the springtime flavors and verdant colors of fresh favas, English peas, fennel fronds, walnuts and thin shavings of smoked provolone.

Standout smaller plates include a terrific Peruvian-inflected scallop ceviche ($12) with green apricot, avocado and acidic verjus; chewy pan-fried pierogi filled with rich beef cheek and apple ($10) and dolloped with cultured cream, fine herbs and togarashi; and the carrot creste de gallo ($18) featuring a deep-flavored, spicy chicken sugo and more excellent provolone. Only charred baby octopus ($18) with smoked potatoes disappoints, its adolescent-sized tentacles cooked to an unpleasant toughness.

Entrees boast more consistency. Roasted lamb ribs ($26) with warm potato salad feature the brilliant accent of a cumin-heavy finishing sauce. Striped bass ($28) with white beans and giardiniera is perfectly cooked if a bit pedestrian in its boned presentation. Hanger steak ($31) is surprisingly tender and complemented by a bright romesco and subtle ramp crema, but its best idea is a sprinkling of fierce Southeast Asian-style fried garlic, a trick more steakhouses should steal. Suckling pig ($29) might be the knockout, centered on crisp-edged, fatty slices of rolled belly roast, a tender pressé of shredded pork shoulder, fiddleheads, leeks, Muscat grapes, pretty leaves of nasturtium and lilac spinach, and johnnycakes tinted green with pea juice. It's a tour de force de porc.

Pastry chef Meghan Thompson contributes a short list of winsome, delectable desserts, such as ice cream flavored with candy cap mushrooms ($10), topped with chewy steel-cut oats and given a tart exclamation point with chervil and apple vinaigrette, and a roasted-banana sundae ($12) that evokes a droll gourmand's rendition of a Carvel novelty treat with miso ice cream, of-the-moment Tcho chocolate, fluffy marshmallows and an edible cone topper.

Bar manager Sean Frederick offers an extraordinary craft cocktail program, evidenced by clever originals like the Kingston Cup ($12) of Pimm's cordial, Jamaican rum, ginger, lime and Sichuan peppercorn—like a Tiki cocktail that stumbled into a Wimbledon party. The by-the-glass wine list has two sparklers, five whites, one very charcuterie-friendly sherry and five reds ($10-$16). The bottle list of eight sparklers ($32-$230), 33 whites ($32-$140) and 30 reds ($37-$183) includes a welcome number of affordable bottles, like a 2012 Landron Muscadet "Les Houx" ($32), a canonical oyster pairing.

Service is mostly on-point but occasionally fudges a guess at ingredients, an unexpected lapse in a place proud of its sourcing. Bright lighting and plain furnishings contribute to a lively, informal feel. In essence, Jennings has taken the farmhouse traditions that won him fame and wrapped them in sleek, urban brasserie trappings. The versatile result—with its lunch/dinner/late-night service, excellent drinks and bustling vibe—can't help but attract financiers by day and residents of new nearby luxury high-rises by night. I suspect what will keep chefs and food nerds coming back is Jennings' confident, loving way with the raw and the cured, where the soul of his cooking clearly lies. ◆

CHERYL CLARKSON
M.S., Massachusetts Institute of Technology
CEO & Founder
SkinHealth Centers

Q: MY FRIEND SAID THAT SHE RECENTLY HAD A CHEMICAL PEEL AND LOVED IT. WHAT IS THAT?

A: Chemical peels are professional skin care treatments that provide gentle exfoliation to reveal fresher, healthier skin. Each day thousands of our skin cells die, flake off and are replaced by new cells. Chemical peels speed up this process.

A topical peeling solution is applied to the skin to loosen and remove the upper layers of dead and damaged skin and reveal new, fresher skin underneath. There are several different types of mild to moderate chemical peels such as glycolic, lactic, pumpkin and salicylic.

Chemical peels can be used for skin rejuvenation to help reverse the signs of aging and the damage of past sun exposure. They can also be used on oily skin to help to control acne and breakouts. Peels can help dry, sensitive skin look revitalized. Peels only take a few minutes and there is usually no downtime.

SUPERFLUOUS

SEQUEL FATIGUE STARTS TO SETTLE IN DURING THE SECOND AVENGERS.

THE INTERNET EXPLODED INTO A FRENZY of fanboy rage when the teaser trailer for next year's Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice was leaked a few weeks back. The general feeling was that filmmaker Zack Snyder's overstuffed superhero film looks too dark, that Snyder simply doesn't seem to understand what's made DC Comics' characters so appealing for more than half a century.

On the flip side, there's Joss Whedon. A fan favorite for his television work with Buffy the Vampire Slayer and the cult hit Firefly, he graduated into the big leagues when he wrote and directed 2012's The Avengers, the Marvel Comics-derived, team-based superhero film that earned more than $1.5 billion in global receipts.

Naturally, it was only a matter of time before the Avengers would reassemble. Now that they're back, in the 11th Marvel film in what appears to be a never-ending cycle of movies featuring men in tights (Avengers: Infinity War – Parts I and II are due in 2018 and '19), sequel fatigue has begun to settle in.

Whedon has said that this movie's production took its toll, and you can see why. He's serving so many masters here—setting up not only the next two Avengers films (to be directed by brothers Anthony and Joe Russo), but also a third Thor film, a third Captain America picture (also helmed by the Russos), the first Black Panther movie and who knows what else.

The movie opens in medias res, with Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr.), Captain America (Chris Evans), Thor (Chris Hemsworth), The Hulk (Mark Ruffalo and a bunch of CGI), Black Widow (Scarlett Johansson, three body doubles and more CGI to hide her pregnancy) and that guy with the bow and arrow (Jeremy Renner) storming the Eastern European castle stronghold of Baron Strucker (Thomas Kretschmann), or "Hydra's No. 1 thug," as Cap calls him. This well-choreographed sequence highlights the Avengers' effectiveness as a team with a show of strength that unfortunately isn't matched by any of the action scenes that follow, which begin to suffer from the surfeit of quick-cut CGI destruction that made Snyder's misguided Superman reboot, 2013's Man of Steel, such a chore to sit through.

The Nazi-spawned Hydra, as was revealed in last year's superior Captain America: The Winter Soldier, had secretly infiltrated S.H.I.E.L.D., the government agency headed by Nick Fury (Samuel L. Jackson) that assembled the Avengers to protect our planet. So I'm not quite sure who they answer to since S.H.I.E.L.D. collapsed, although Tony Stark—the man inside Iron Man—points out that Cap, aka Steve Rogers, is the group's de facto leader.

"He's the boss; I just design and pay for everything, make everyone look a little cooler," says Tony, who for some reason has suited up after retiring from the superhero game at the end of 2013's Iron Man 3. He and the anger-prone Dr. Bruce Banner—who transforms into the 8-foot-tall, green-skinned Hulk when his blood pressure rises—have been working on the artificially intelligent Ultron Program, which Tony envisions as "a suit of armor around the world" that could bring "peace in our time."

When the Avengers recover the magic scepter belonging to Thor's brother Loki from Strucker, the "Infinity Stone" that's contained within it unwittingly becomes the key to the creation of Ultron's A.I. And it's already spawned the powers of two new characters Strucker had been secretly experimenting on, twins Pietro and Wanda Maximoff, aka Quicksilver (Aaron Taylor-Johnson) and the Scarlet Witch (Elizabeth Olsen), whose abilities are summed up by S.H.I.E.L.D. agent Maria Hill (Cobie Smulders): "He's fast, and she's weird."

That's the type of dialogue Whedon's known for, but much of the banter he's written for his heroes falls flat or feels forced here. And Ultron (voiced in a deliciously arch performance by James Spader), who emerges in an ever-evolving robotic body as the Avengers' nemesis, takes on a bit of dad Tony's ironic sensibilities, quipping to such a degree that his menace is hampered when he, say, forgets a line halfway through an intimidating monologue—just to create some levity where it's least needed.

Nevertheless, Whedon's second Avengers adventure still lacks much of the fun of its predecessor. But he has addressed some criticisms directed at the earlier film. Take Clint Barton, "that guy with the bow and arrow" I joked about earlier. Comic book fans will tell you his name is Hawkeye, but you'd be hard-pressed to remember that from the last movie, where Whedon effectively turned him into a mind-controlled zombie during the first half, then dangled him from a building during the second. But here, Whedon makes him the most fully-formed character in the film. He also fills in some backstory for Natasha Romanoff, aka the Black Widow, and provides her an unexpected romance with Dr. Banner/The Hulk—while giving Iron Man, Cap and Thor less to do besides hurl one-liners at one another.

But it's Linda Cardellini, who appears as Barton's civilian wife, Laura, who gets perhaps the best line: "You know I totally support your Avenging."

So do we. But for how long? ◆

MATTER OF FACT

AN UPSTART FROM DOWN UNDER ROCKS WITH A KNACK FOR DEADPAN DETAIL

COURTNEY BARNETT PLUCKED THE title for her debut album, Sometimes I Sit and Think, and Sometimes I Just Sit, from a quote by Winnie-the-Pooh author A.A. Milne that graced a poster in her grandmother's bathroom.

Barnett doesn't just sit very often though, as the rising Australian indie-rocker busily traverses time zones. But she does a lot of thinking, observing seemingly mundane objects and interactions with a keen eye, processing the dread and humor of everyday life through a very active mind.

"It's constantly churning, which can be a fucking nightmare," Barnett says.

Luckily, that head gets emptied on a regular basis. The singer/guitarist jots her experiences and anxieties in a journal, eventually transforming those impressions into a sprawling flow of half-spoken lyrics, at turns clever and poignant—and playfully parsed in her accented drawl.

"I just kept trying different processes," Barnett, 27, says from her home in Melbourne. "I would kinda read stuff over bits of music I'd written and let it piece itself together."

America discovered her gift through last year's sleeper hit "Avant Gardener," a woozy account of an allergy attack from The Double EP: A Sea of Split Peas. Adrift in the song's melodic swells, she drops ebb-and-flow deadpan couplets like "I'm breathing but I'm wheezing, feel like I'm emphysema-in' " and "The paramedic thinks I'm clever cos I play guitar, I think she's clever cos she stops people dying."

She spins her lyrics from real life, despite some sly exaggerations like that song's "adrenaline straight to the heart" line, where Barnett name-drops Uma Thurman in a nod to a scene from the movie Pulp Fiction. "I got a shot in my thigh," Barnett admits. "Everything else is pretty much a 95 percent true happening and true detail."

Barnett has cultivated a broader, more buoyant collection on Sometimes I Sit and Think, and Sometimes I Just Sit, released in March. Suburban house hunting, roadkill and lovesick sleeplessness provide lyrical fodder, while the music expands to the '60s-tinged pop hop "Debbie Downer," the dreamy surf-blues "Small Poppies" and the self-loathing, Nirvana-esque blast "Pedestrian at Best," in which Barnett barks, "Put me on a pedestal, and I'll only disappoint you."

"The anger and frustration in some of the songs is the helplessness and feeling that you're incapable of helping..."

The album peaks in the brooding, psychedelic "Kim's Caravan," which Barnett says she wrote after a trip to a friend's coastal retreat near Melbourne, stressed about rounding out the album with more material. "I basically hit a real wall and just went into a bit of a dark place and got writer's block for the weekend and got nothing done," she says, "at a loss about me and the world around me." Walking the beach, she saw a dead seal, which surfaces in the lyrics along with the Great Barrier Reef. "It's been raped beyond belief, the dredgers treat it like a whore," Barnett sings, shortly before the song hits a Crazy Horse-like guitar crescendo.

"The anger and frustration in some of the songs is the helplessness and feeling that you're incapable of helping or making any sort of change," Barnett says, "watching people be idiots around you."

She hails from an arts-minded family near Sydney. Her mother was a ballet dancer and her father a graphic designer who "mostly listened to jazz and classical," so Barnett was introduced to rock through an older brother. She was into Nirvana by age 10, picking out "Come as You Are" on guitar, and moved on to Guns N' Roses, Television, Talking Heads, and the Presidents of the United States of America, a band ripe with quirky lyrics. She wrote a bit of poetry and then studied art at the University of Tasmania (her drawings grace her album covers) before moving to Melbourne, where she played in garage-grunge and psych-country bands.

Barnett also bartended at a social club, a job she finally had to quit as her global demand grew, though she was back to playing with friends on a recent weekend home. "I'm still doing the same things, just sometimes on a bigger scale," says the singer/guitarist, whose trio rocks the Sinclair on May 18 and the Newport Folk Festival on July 25. "You're just playing music. It's cool, wherever it is." ◆

DRONE ZONE

AMATEUR FILMMAKING REACHES NEW HEIGHTS.

A FEW MONTHS BACK, I BOUGHT A DRONE. I had a vague notion that I could use a drone for shooting video, so I bought a Blade 350 QX, a relatively affordable model that can carry a GoPro. Video capability is important, because the GoPro allows you to say "I'm flying my drone" rather than "I'm playing with my radio-controlled helicopter." If you see a guy flying a radio-controlled plane, he's an emotionally stunted man-child. If you see me flying my drone, I'm a cinematographer getting some important footage. Wheee!

While I use my drone to shoot car videos and find out which of my neighbors have swimming pools that they're not inviting me to use, my friend Sandy Poirier—proprietor of Shag in Southie—gets a little more creative. When I asked him what he'd shot with his DJI Phantom 2, he sent a link to a short clip of a model standing atop a cliff in the Quincy quarry, her red dress billowing cinematically as she pretends to shoot a movie with an old-timey camera. I think Sandy's videos might have a slightly higher production value than mine, the most recent of which was entitled "Zapruder-level shaky video of my dogs barking at the sky." It will probably not make the cut at Sundance. Worse, there was not even one model involved.

Judging by the quarry video, Sandy's flight skills are pretty smooth, but he says that while he was learning the ropes he almost had a flyaway—drone jargon for the unhappy circumstance when your little aircraft stops responding to the controls and goes all Amelia Earhart on you. "I started running after it, and I guess I got within range because it came back," he says. Sandy wrote his phone number on the Phantom, which is either prudent or risky, depending on where it lands. Err, sorry about your outdoor display of Ming vases, Secretary of State Kerry.

Inspired by Sandy's video, I decide to take my drone to a nearby field—some might call it a golf course—and practice my technique. Right away, I pull off a sweet flip, going inverted before touching the skids to the grass and bouncing skyward. It would've been extra cool if I'd done it intentionally. I decide to increase the altitude to give myself room to maneuver.

I push forward on the throttle stick and watch the drone climb into the sky, higher and higher, until it's a white dot pinned against the blue sky. I spin it around just to make sure it's still responding. And then, as I ease back the throttle to bring it down, I think, "Nah, let's go a little higher." Entranced, I watch the Blade climb yet again, until I can barely see it. Must be a great view from up there! Vicariously, I'm flying. And then I take my eye off it.

Suddenly, the Blade is gone. I know where it should be, its approximate spot in the sky, but it's vanished. Thinking of Sandy's strategy, I run the length of a par five until I'm beneath the last known location. The whole time, I lean on the "go home" toggle, which tells the drone to use its GPS to return to the spot where it took off. But there's no sign of it, no telltale buzz from the four whirring propellers. Why, why did I have to fly higher? Curse me, for I am verily the Icarus of small electric helicopters!

I search the woods for about 15 minutes, gauging the wind to estimate where it might've gone down, but I know the effort is futile. The Blade could literally be a mile away, up in a tree or sunk in a pond. With denial out of the way, I move on to the second stage of grief: anger. And boy, I'm good and angry. Financially speaking, I just shot $800 out of a cannon. The only reason I don't spike the remote on a rock is that I might at least be able to sell it to some lucky bastard who didn't fly his drone to the Azores.

Why, why did I have to fly higher? Curse me, for I am verily the Icarus of small electric helicopters!

I'm nearly back to the car when I trudge up to my starting point to find none other than the Blade 350 QX, sitting upright and chirping happily right where it took off. Home! It went home! How it got there without me seeing it I still don't know. But I've never been so happy to see an inanimate object.

And I learned my lesson. No, not about flying too high—after looking at the footage, I think I can go higher. But from now on, if a Blade 350 QX suddenly drops into your backyard, you'll have my number. You can use it to invite me over to the pool. ◆

Soroff On / Maura Tierney

AFFAIRS OF THE ART

THE VETERAN ACTRESS GETS REAL ABOUT CHEATING, HER HARDEST ROLE AND HER FAVE LEADING MAN.

PROLIFIC TELEVISION, FILM AND STAGE ACTRESS MAURA Tierney, 50, was born and raised in Boston and studied acting at New York University. First known for her work on the sitcom NewsRadio, she starred on ER for eight seasons and had roles on The Good Wife and Rescue Me before her current turn as cheated-on wife Helen Solloway in the Showtime drama The Affair. On the big screen, she has appeared in Primary Colors, Nature Calls, Baby Mama and Liar, Liar, while her extensive stage work includes her 2013 Broadway debut opposite Tom Hanks in Nora Ephron's Lucky Guy. She divides her time between Los Angeles and New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Favorite of all your shows?
MAURA TIERNEY: The first thing that comes to mind is Rescue Me, because I really, really liked the character that I played on that show. It was after doing ER for so long, and it was really nice that somebody cast me as a completely different character than the one I'd played for eight seasons. She was snarky and irreverent and funny, and I wore awesome clothes. I guess I judge the shows I like by how much I like my wardrobe.

Role you didn't get but wish you had? You kinda can't think like that, because you have to move forward. But early in my career, I really wanted to be in Say Anything. I read for that movie, I'm not shitting you, four or five times. I desperately wanted to be in it. I also read for Jerry Maguire and got really far down the line with that. I read with Tom Cruise. But Cameron Crowe just won't put me in a movie.

Hardest role you ever played? Hmmm. Lucky Guy, the play I did with Tom Hanks, wasn't quite finished before Nora Ephron died. It was a struggle every night to see if I would land it. It wasn't entirely there, so I had to sweat it, because it was important that it be good.

Broadway and Tom Hanks. Isn't that just being greedy? Listen, I throw deep, as Tom Hanks says. I know. Can you imagine? No, you can't imagine. Our audiences were so dying to see the show. We were sold out every night. The play was wonderful. Every night the audience would leap to their feet the moment it was over. It was something I'll never experience again.

Did being treated for cancer affect the way you approach acting? Well, I don't know. I guess it affected everything, so if you look at it that way, yes. But not really. An interesting thing, though, is that as soon as I finished treatment, the first job I got was with the Wooster Group, which is this very avant-garde theater company in New York, and that experience changed my whole approach to acting.

With all those seasons on ER, did you learn any real medicine? Absolutely not. I don't even know how to take someone's pulse. Although I know all the lingo, so I could talk to a doctor about a procedure. But I couldn't actually do anything. The most might be stitching someone up and leaving them with a really bad Frankensteiny scar.

"I really wanted to be in Say Anything. I read for that movie, I'm not shitting you, four or five times."

Would you ever have an affair? Yes. I don't mean to say that eagerly. But life is really complicated. I was married for 15 years and never did, but I could never say never. I don't know. That's why I like the show. It asks a lot of questions.

What would you do if you found out your husband was cheating? I did find it out with a boyfriend, not my ex-husband, and it was hard. But I remember talking to my mother like 15 years ago. There was someone we knew who had an affair, and the wife took him back. I remember saying, "I would never, ever do that." And my mother paused, then said, "You know, when you get older, you'd be surprised by the shit you can put up with." And she's right. Everybody's human.

What do you look for in a script? If it's unique. If it's a perspective I haven't seen before. If the female character is not two-dimensional. And I really do think it's important that there's humor. Nothing works without some humor.

Comedy or drama? I've been doing drama for so long now, I would love to do another half-hour comedy. I'd love to do a multi-cam half-hour, which is something that's disappearing.

Anything you want to erase from your resume? Dead Women in Lingerie. [Laughs]

What was the movie you did with O.J. Simpson? That was my first job. Student Exchange. It had O.J. Simpson, Lindsay Wagner, the Bionic Woman, Captain Stubing from The Love Boat, Gavin MacLeod, Heather Graham, Moon Unit Zappa...

Was that movie unfairly overlooked by the Academy? Ahh, no. O.J.'s work might have been. You know what Jim Carrey said to me? We were making Liar, Liar right around the time of the trial, and I told Jim Carrey, "Y'know, I worked with O.J. Simpson." He said, "Oh, really? Did he try to cut your head off?" [Laughs]

You've worked with him, John Travolta, Richard Gere. Who was your favorite leading man? Hmm... I'm going to go with Richard Gere, because that was sort of the first big movie I got. I remember walking onto set at Paramount with him, thinking, "I'm walking onto a movie set with Richard Gere!" He was such a movie star. A lovely, charming man and super foxy.

Weirdest thing you ever read about yourself? Probably from my time on ER, stuff about fighting on the set that just never happened. But I escape the tabloids for the most part.

Weirdest fan encounter? Well, there was one guy who used to send me so many letters. They were very nice, but really hundreds of them. Anyway, he suffered from severe agoraphobia, and he was convinced that if I would just meet him somewhere, he would finally leave his house. He also wrote a script for me. It was actually pretty funny.

Thing you miss most about Boston? Oddly, my grandmother's apartment in the projects. She lived there for 55 years, in Southie, and I went there my whole life. It was just so full of life and stuff from childhood, and I can never ever go back there. The other places I miss I can still go back to. ◆

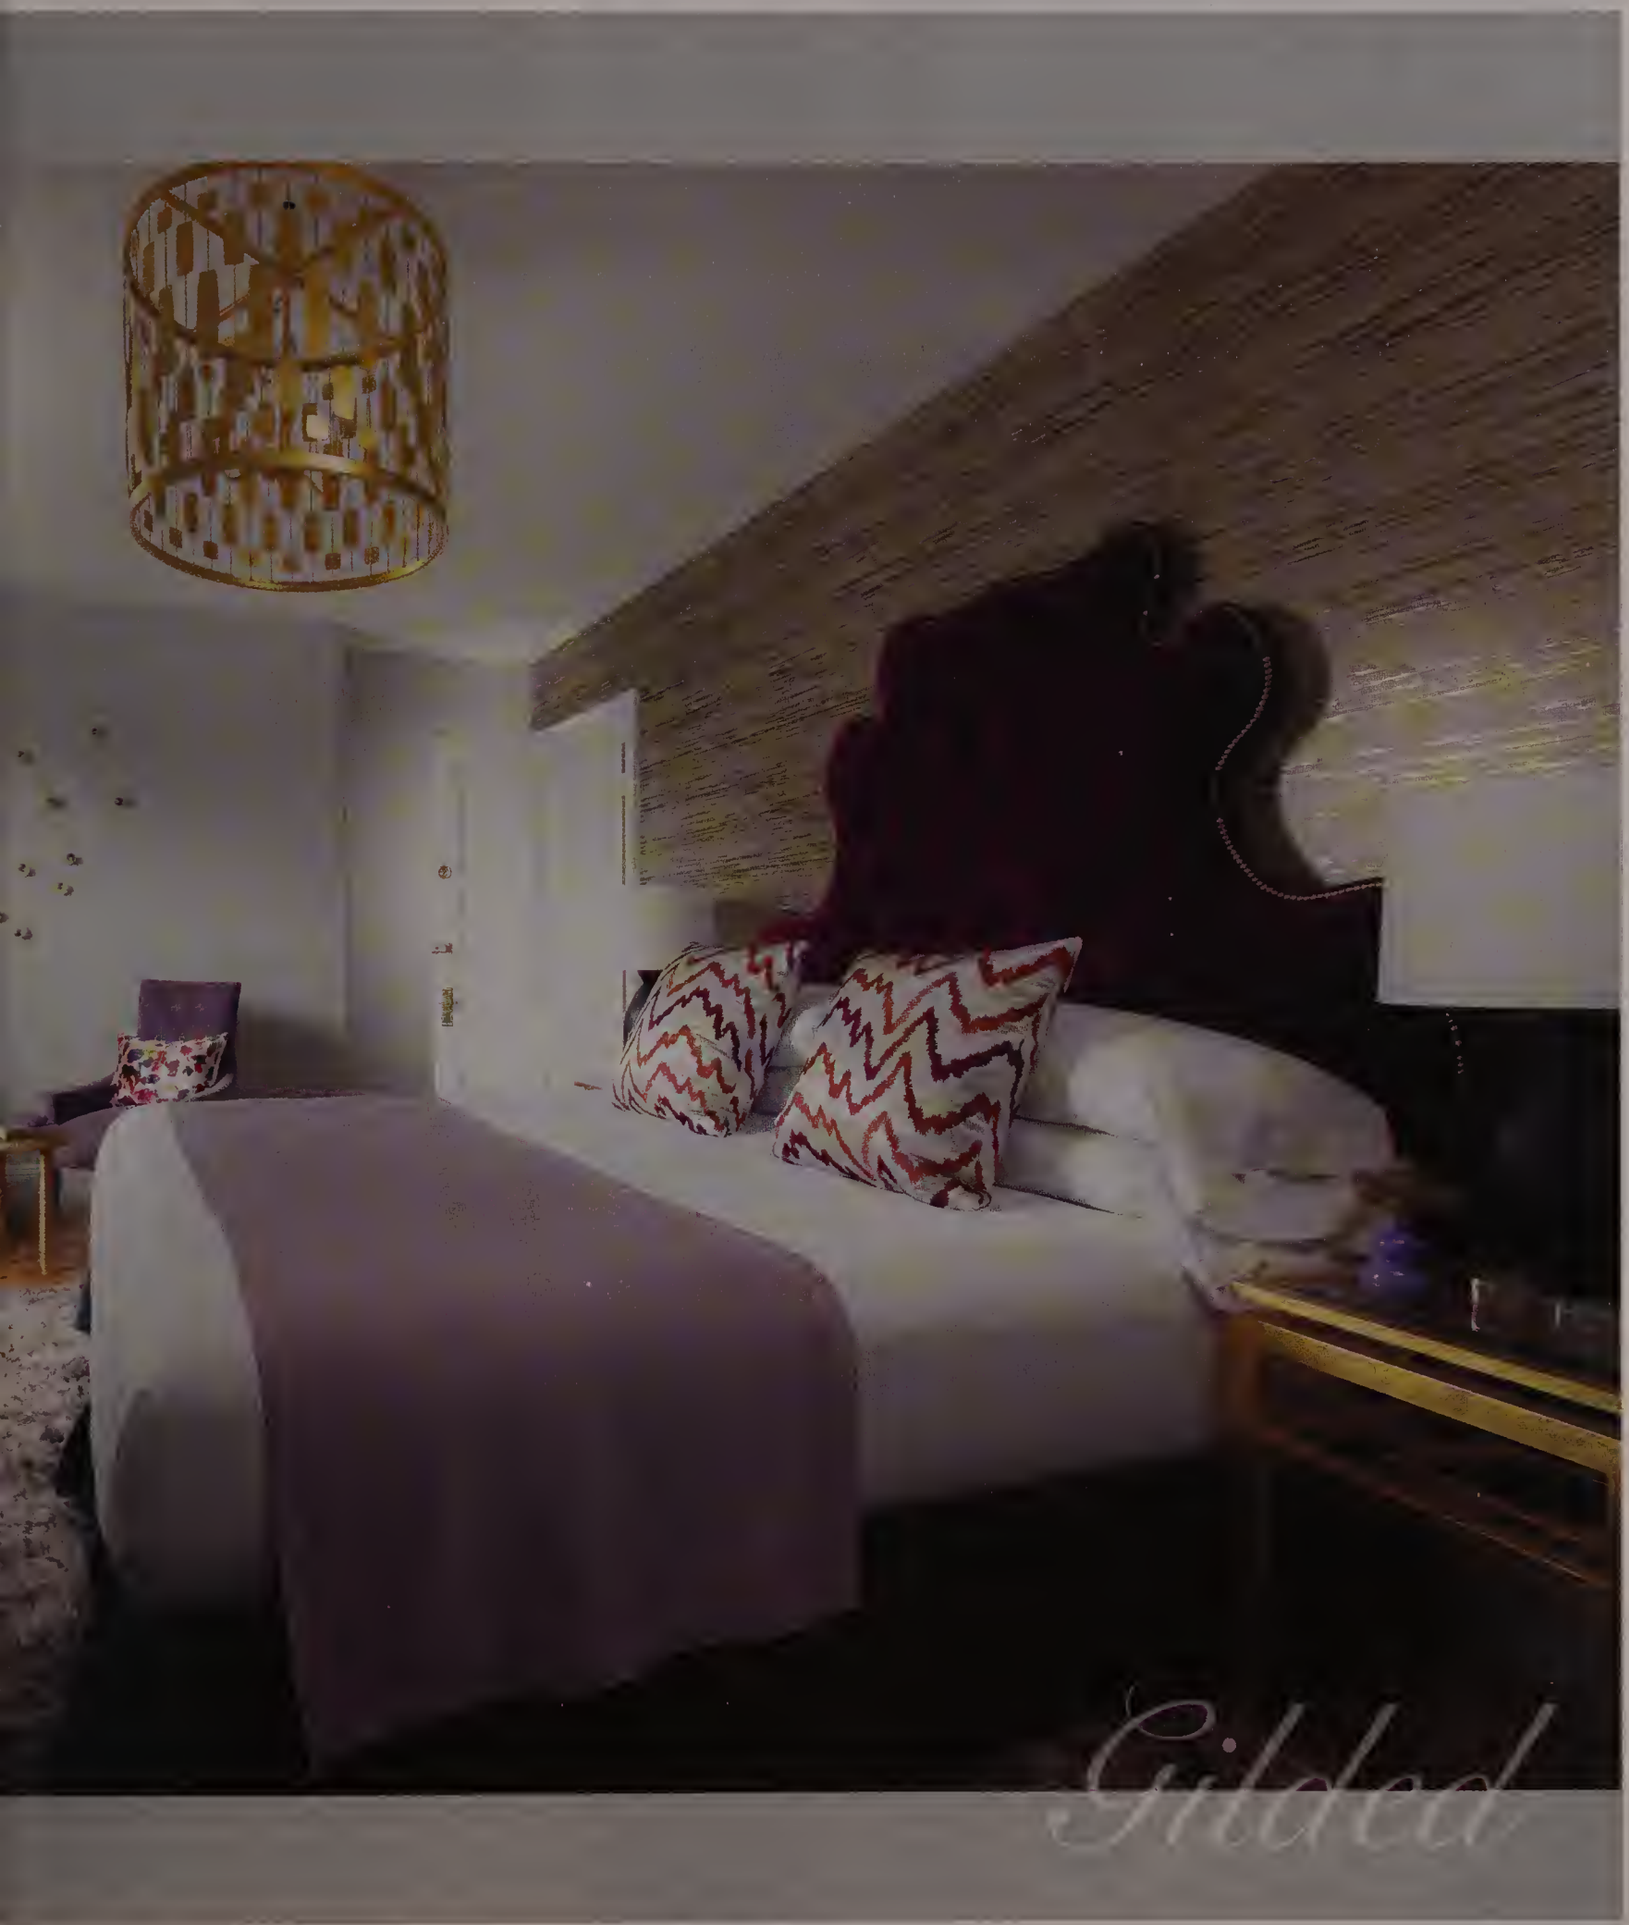
SEASON OPENERS

BY SCOTT KEARNAN

Want to keep your next getaway local? Here are seven exciting New England properties opening in the months ahead. From the tip of the Cape to the southern Rhode Island coast, they're just a tank away.

GILDED

Newport, Rhode Island



Back in the late 19th century, when railroad and mining tycoons first turned tony Newport into the mansion-filled summer resort we know today, luxury looked a little different. They had Vanderbilts and Astors; we have Hiltons and Kardashians. So Gilded, opening in May, dutifully updates the swanky seaport's approach to high-end properties for the Real Housewives generation. Out: Oriental rugs, Fabergé eggs and crystal chandeliers. In: rococo and beaux arts-inspired furnishings with a contemporary edge, in-room iPads pre-programmed with info on local attractions and a black velvet and white lacquer pool table where guests staying in the 17 rooms and suites can shoot a few rounds. Gilded is tucked on a leafy residential side street only a few steps from the main strip of shops and nearby beaches, and its quiet courtyard lounge—with a cozy fire table and a croquet practice green—offers a grassy hideaway for enjoying a nightcap after a day in the sand. (Your room conveniently comes with a beach bag and chair.) Thanks to a partnership with Vineyard Vines, the hotel will even help you outfit yourself appropriately; guests here get special online discounts with the clothier—still a perennial favorite for the pretty and preppy. Some things never change.

✔ TRAVELER'S CHECKS:

- Restaurants courting old money abound, but we love the new blood behind Thames Street Kitchen, helmed by a pair of young chef/pals and their wives (twin sisters). The formerly NYC-based foursome has brought Newport a tiny farm-to-fork spot that feels straight out of Bushwick. Bonus: BYOB.

- The summer sizzles with live music series. Classical concerts define the Newport Music Festival (July 10–26), the Fiona Apple-affiliated project Watkins Family Hour graces the Newport Folk Festival (July 24–26) and a Cassandra Wilson-led tribute to Billie Holiday is a highlight of the Newport Jazz Festival (July 31–Aug. 2).

- Lest you be left ashore while the blue bloods hit the water, Sail Newport offers lessons that'll strengthen your sea legs.

Gilded

EBEN HOUSE

Provincetown, Massachusetts

If the phrase "bed and breakfast" brings to mind lace doilies, creaky floorboards and intrusive hosts wielding bran muffins like weapons, prepare to elevate your expectations. A few years ago, husbands David Bowd and Kevin O'Shea—respectively the former vice president of operations and the lead designer for Morgans Hotel Group, which runs swanky spots like Miami's Delano and NYC's Hudson—moved to Provincetown and opened the Salt House Inn. Now they're building their own boutique brand, Salt Hotels, marrying the quaint charm of B&Bs with the cosmopolitan gloss of high-end design and service. In May, they'll unveil their second P-Town property, Eben House, aiming to offer spirited lodging to young, reasonably well-heeled visitors to the Cape's most colorful summer colony. The 1776 sea captain's estate now boasts 14 rooms and suites outfitted with the best of the old (original moldings and wide-plank floors) and the new (flat-screen TVs and eco-friendly bath products from Los Angeles' trendy Further). Our favorite design detail: local artist-commissioned oil paintings that put some quirky spins (say, drag queen-style chandelier earrings) on otherwise stately powdered-wig portraits of the late captain's family.

✔ TRAVELER'S CHECKS:

- Fill up at the Canteen, where craft beers are downed in a buzzy, hipster-friendly backyard alongside gourmet takes on counter-service classics: Think oysters, tacos and meaty sandwiches dressed all fancy.

- Bask in a star-filled season at the Art House, hosting summer stints from Doogie Howser–turned-hottie Neil Patrick Harris, RuPaul's Drag Race winners Bianca Del Rio and Jinkx Monsoon, and Tony-winning powerhouse Audra McDonald, among others.

- Want to wander farther afield? In May, Salt Hotels also opens the Chequit, a shabby-chic beachcomber on New York's bucolic Shelter Island, accessible only by ferry.

THE PRESS HOTEL

Portland, Maine

Need a place to hammer out the next Great American Novel? (Or just some envy-inducing vacation tweets?) Click-clack your way over to the Press Hotel, opening in May inside a former newspaper building in the historic Old Port district. Word geeks will strain for superlatives to describe the design, from a "letterpress art wall" sculpture at the front desk to drink coasters shaped like typewriter keys. The 110 guest rooms' decor is inspired by 1920s newsrooms: Picture herringbone prints, reeded glass doors and leather desk chairs imprinted with Times New Roman pangrams. Collaborations with Maine artists and authors are highlighted in the hotel's art gallery, whose first exhibition features a display of antique typewriters. And when guests aren't slurring words at the Inkwell, the classic cocktail bar, they can stuff their mouths at UNION, the latest from farm-to-table chef duo Mark Gaier and Clark Frasier, which trades the Renaissance Italian-inflected cuisine of their Boston spot, M.C. Spiedo, for distinctly American coastal cookery. In addition to offering an in-house lecture series, Press Hotel will partner with area arts and culture groups to give guests insider opportunities—so if you want a relaxing getaway that will still engage your mind, this seems like a no-brainer.

THE PRESS HOTEL: IRVIN SERRANO

✔ TRAVELER'S CHECKS:

- Portland has a helluva food scene. Right now all eyes are on the internationally inspired small plates at rustic wunderkind Central Provisions, a James Beard award finalist for the country's Best New Restaurant.

- Hit the neon-glowing dance floor at the awesomely named Bubba's Sulky Lounge, where it's all about '80s pop, shooting pool and cheap drinks in a bric-a-brac-strewn space that resembles a hoarder's rec room. (Retro tin lunchboxes: Everywhere.)

- For an arts scene overview, plan your trip to coincide with a First Friday Art Walk among galleries skewing classic, contemporary and occasionally kooky.

THE BREAK

Narragansett, Rhode Island

Break out your mid-thigh Hawaiian shorts (or itsy bitsy teenie weenie yellow polka dot bikini) and cue the rapid-fire drum solo of "Wipe Out." You needn't visit Cali for a surf-centric getaway—just the Ocean State, where the Break opens in June. Narragansett is a small town that swells during summer months, when University of Rhode Island students hit the road and vacationers and second-home owners move in to hit the same famous waves that seasoned 1960s surf legend Peter Pan; the Break has partnered with his nearby shop to offer guests board rentals and lessons. Rather stay dry? Totally chill, brah. Sprawled beside Scarborough Beach (for maximum bronzing), the hotel features colorful and funky midcentury-inspired furnishings in 16 rooms where you could easily imagine Frankie Avalon luring a beehive-coiffed babe for a round of beach blanket bingo, if you catch our drift. The amenities are modern, including Apple TVs, ocean-view balconies and a year-round heated outdoor pool (with sundeck and hot tub) for guest-only splashing. When appetites crest, fruity cocktails and horizon views await at the Rooftop Lounge, while Chair 5—named for a local lifeguard post—is the intimate in-house restaurant serving modern seafood and fun, upscale twists on beach snack shack fare. Tubular.

✔ TRAVELER'S CHECKS:

- The digs feel a little dated, but don't be fooled. Spain restaurant is tops for spicy paella and pasta, plus strong sangria pours. (Request a seat on the Old World–style patio with gurgling fountain.)
- Renovated after Superstorm Sandy, the Coast Guard House—set beside an iconic oceanfront arch of granite towers—has a big bar where you can soak up the coast's most inspiring sunset.
- Ferry service from Point Judith links Narragansett to Block Island, a sparsely populated Atlantic speck about 13 miles offshore that's nearly half conserved natural space. Your agenda: barely touched beaches, watersports and bicycle paths by coastal lighthouses.

HOTEL ON NORTH

Pittsfield, Massachusetts

A few years ago, The Financial Times dubbed renascent Pittsfield the "Brooklyn of the Berkshires"—pretty impressive, considering that the Berkshires are already the Brooklyn of Massachusetts. And opening in June is Hotel on North, a property tailor-made for Western Mass. vacationers with downtown tastes and enough green for a week's worth of craft brew tastings, museum admissions and yoga intensives. A $14 million renovation of a historic former department store building has preserved original brick walls, wood columns and tin ceilings while debuting 45 HGTV-ready rooms swathed in soothing and sophisticated yellow, blue and gray tones. Many have fireplaces and claw-foot tubs, extended-stay accommodations boast kitchenettes and the 650-square-foot Library Suite has floor-to-ceiling bookcases and a separate sitting room with a wet bar. (Sorry, no pipe puffing allowed.) Custom furnishings are the work of local artisans, the minibars are stocked with Berkshires-made noshes, guests caffeinate with cold-brew coffee from a small-batch roaster in neighboring West Stockbridge, and nearby farms inform menus at Eat and Drink on North, the in-house restaurant emphasizing shareable plates and whole-animal roasts for groups of six or more. Think Local Achievement: unlocked! Now we just need a room key.

✔ TRAVELER'S CHECKS:

- Locals love the steamed dumplings and other Eastern eats at Flavours of Malaysia—cheap, simple and absolutely delicious.
- Pittsfield is a great home base for exploring the Western Mass. arts scene; it's within a half-hour drive of the BSO's summer home at Tanglewood, North Adams' Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art, the Williamstown Theatre Festival and many smaller arts groups. And Hotel on North is just around the corner from Barrington Stage Company, where summer shows include Man of La Mancha and Lost in Yonkers.
- Nature buffs: Hike (or drive) to the summit of Mount Greylock, the highest peak in Massachusetts.

THE GODFREY HOTEL BOSTON

Boston, Massachusetts

Boston is among America's 10 most visited cities. And yet here we natives sit with our cursors hovered over Expedia.com, dreaming of faraway lands while forgetting to appreciate the vibrant city underfoot. Your assignment: Book a staycation at the Godfrey, opening downtown at 505 Washington St. this fall, and experience the Hub through less jaded eyes. The Godfrey has preserved the building's prewar stone and brick façade but juxtaposed it with an interior of slick porcelain floors, pigmented oak panels, contemporary furnishings and 242 handsome guest rooms with bay windows and tartan accents. In the hotel's cafe, you can sip roasts from George Howell, a pioneering local rock star of the specialty coffee movement, and an as-yet-unnamed chef will commandeer the ground-floor restaurant. The Godfrey is still cagey on details—though we're promised a 24-hour fitness facility and a tech-driven approach that will allow guests to do everything from check in to hail a cab via their smartphones—but we know enough to be excited. This Godfrey is a sibling of an industrial-chic Chicago flagship that opened last year amid Windy City raves. So don't sleep on this one.

✔ TRAVELER'S CHECKS:

- Embrace Boston history with dinner at the Brahmin haunt that invented the Boston cream pie: Parker's Restaurant in the Omni Parker House, America's longest continuously operating hotel. Lovebirds, request table 40, where JFK proposed to Jackie.

- Discover downtown's modern art scene at Lot F Gallery, which highlights emerging artists during monthly exhibitions and weekly Saturday open house hours (noon–4 pm).

- For bespoke fashions, book a consultation at the downtown showroom of 9tailors, where you choose fabrics and styles for perfectly sized suits, shirts and outerwear.

INN AT DIAMOND COVE

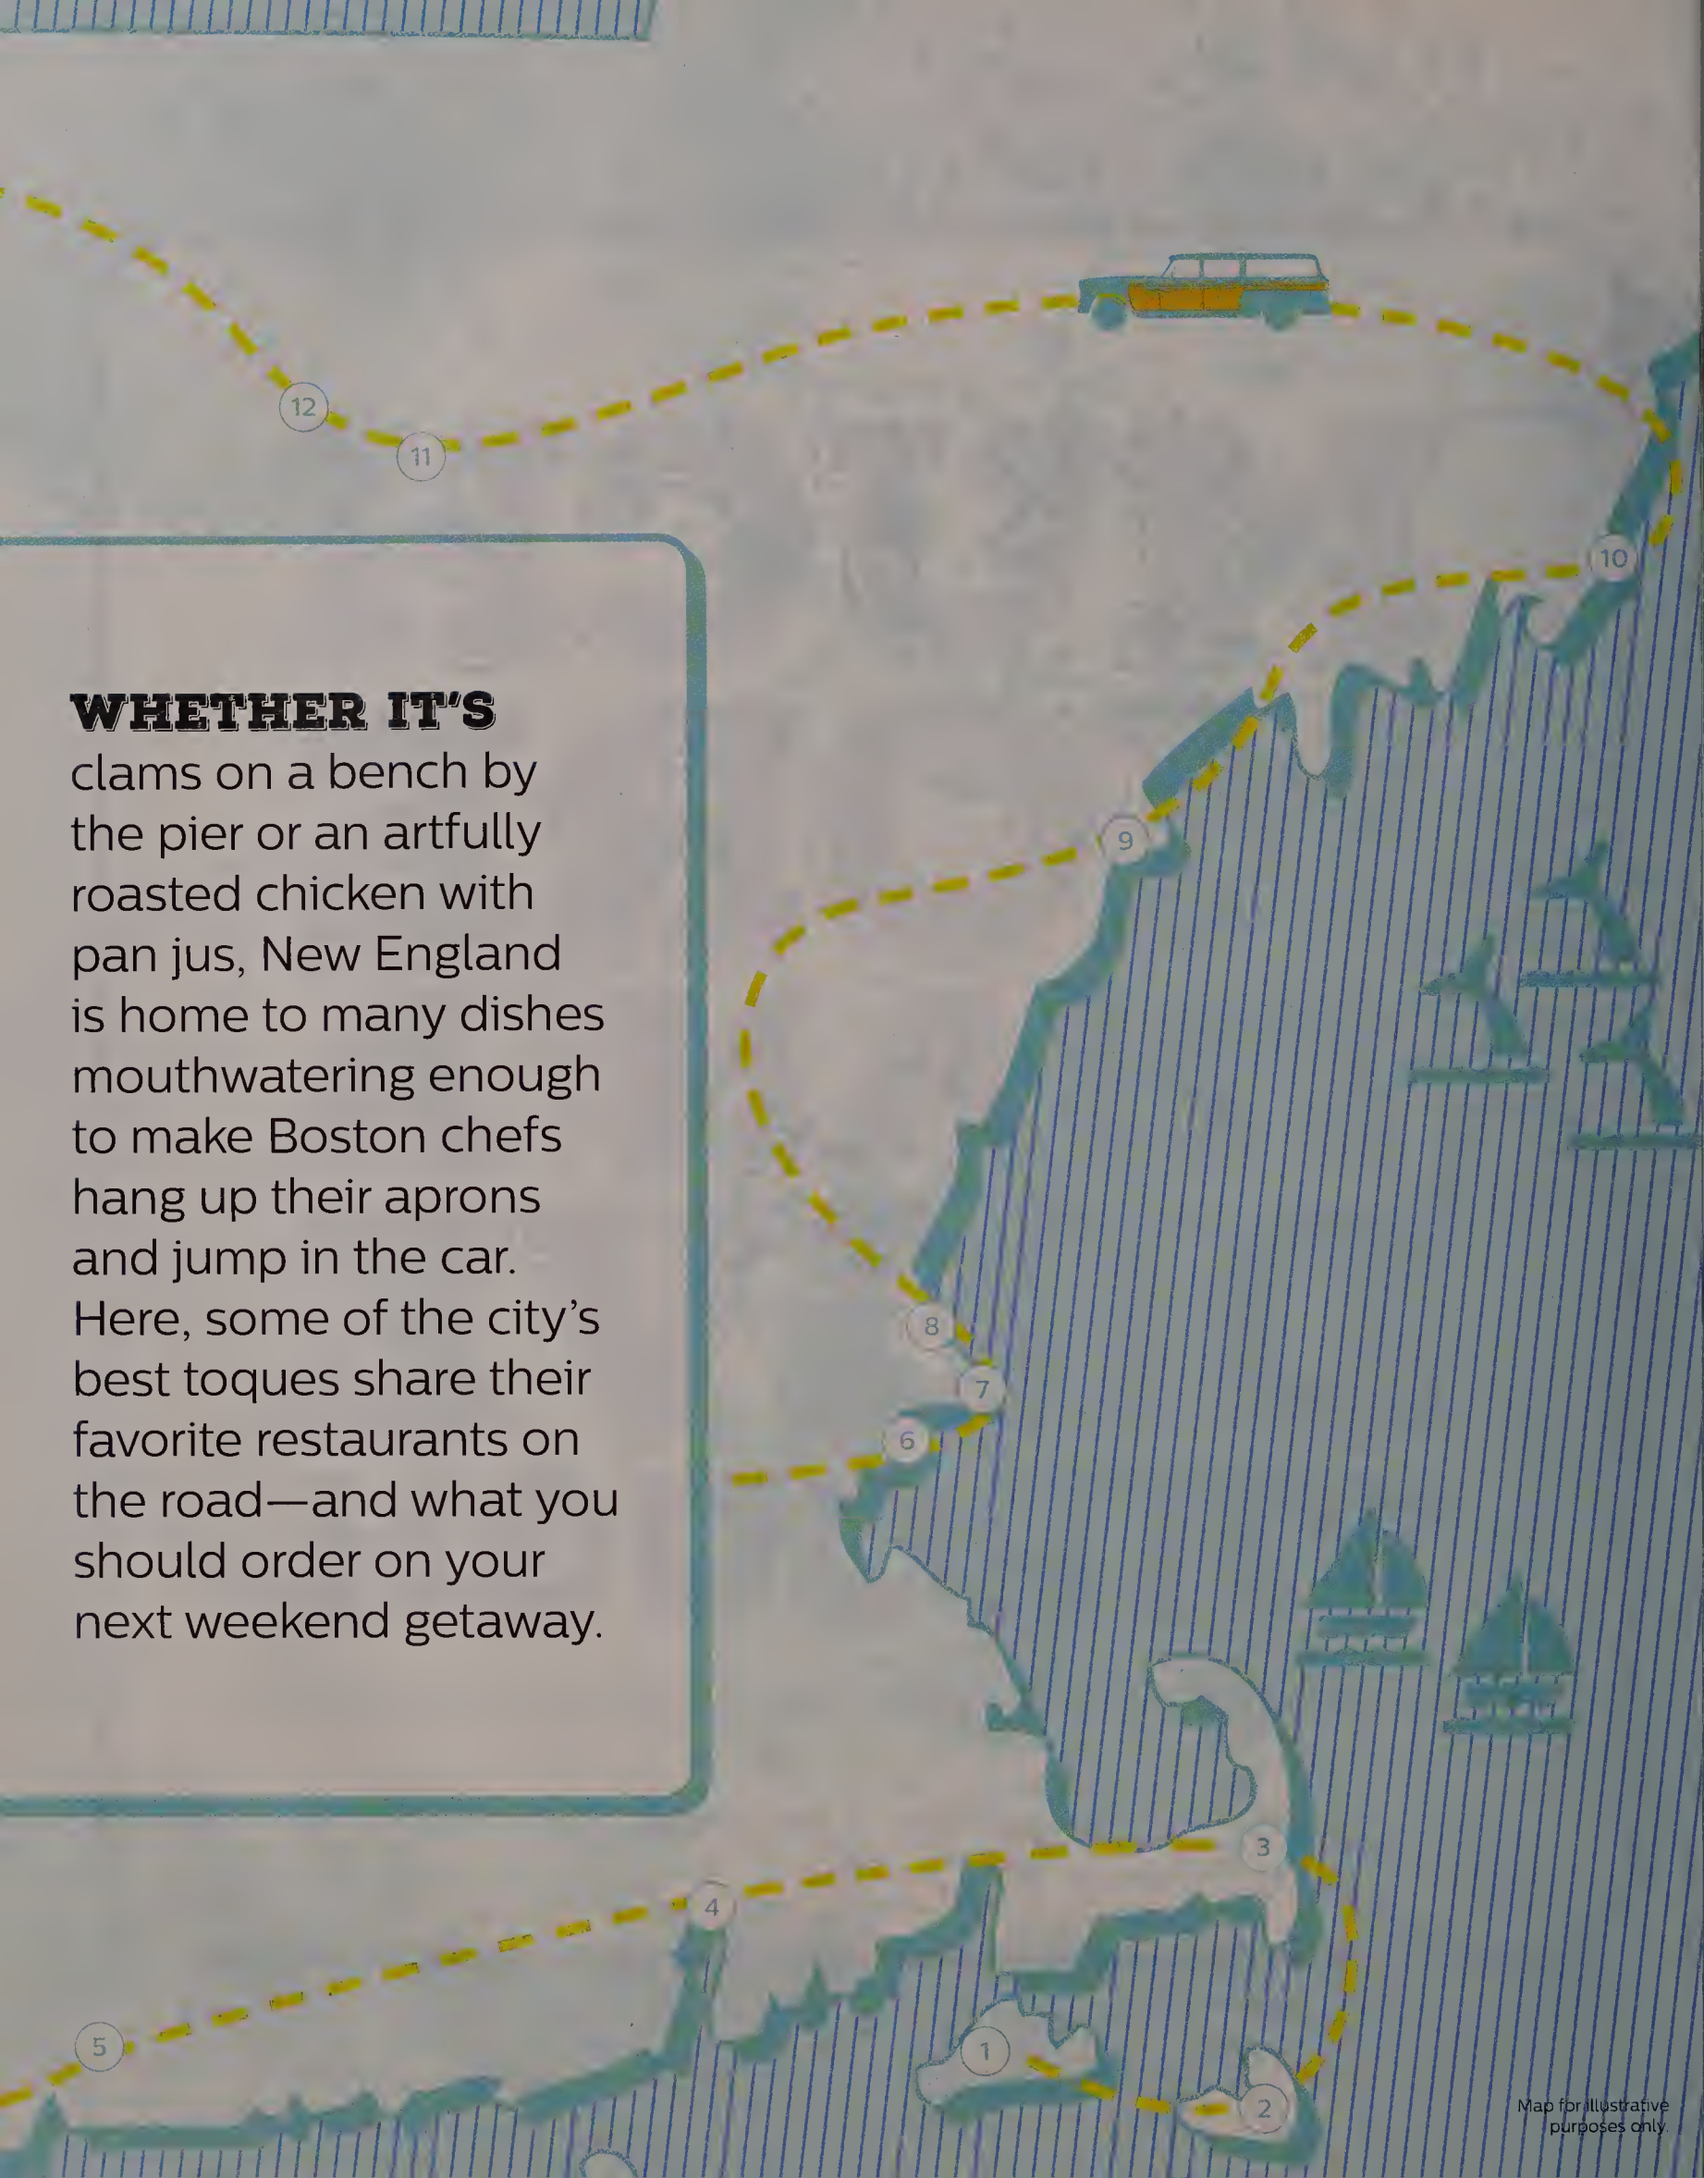
Great Diamond Island, Portland, Maine

For island getaways in New England, instincts typically turn to Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket. But head north, solitude-seeking traveler, to discover the many unspoiled islands off the coast of Maine—like Casco Bay's Great Diamond Island, home to a year-round population of less than 100. A short ferry ride from the mainland, the tiny island is a former military base; the Inn at Diamond Cove, opening in June, rises from the rubble of historic army barracks. The inn was originally slated to open last year, but a fire in late 2013 razed the near-finished property. Developers salvaged as much of the structure as possible and sourced era-appropriate materials to rebuild the rest. Now the 44-room hotel, featuring bayside balconies and a heated pool with a cabana bar, will welcome guests to a virtually car-free island where vacationers spend lazy days sunning at the beach, traipsing miles of walking trails, sailing in and out of a full-service marina, hitting tennis courts or even playing some frames in a restored turn-of-the-century bowling alley with a handful of vintage arcade games. Here it's all about peace, quiet and whiling away in an Adirondack chair. Summering on ACK is exciting, but sometimes you want to go where nobody knows your name. Cheers.

✔ TRAVELER'S CHECKS:

- Hungry? You'll lunch on the lawn of the salt-water toffee-stocked Diamond Cove General Store, which offers a full-service cafe menu, and sup at the upscale-American Diamond's Edge Restaurant. (Lobster bake, anyone?) But Portland is accessible enough for day trips and dining, and the island's longer-stay guests also order food deliveries from mainland markets.

- Locals suggest catching the sunset from Moon Garden, a landscaped stone pier where you might spot an eagle, osprey or seal.



- For even more solitude, head an hour's north of Portland to Southport, Maine. Off its coast is the Inn at Cuckolds Lighthouse, housing two rentable suites inside a restored lighthouse. Splurging friends can claim both and have their own private island.

MUCH MORE THAN A DRIVE THROUGH

Boston chefs share getaway-worthy restaurants

BY CARLEY D. THORNELL

WHETHER IT'S clams on a bench by the pier or an artfully roasted chicken with pan jus, New England is home to many dishes mouthwatering enough to make Boston chefs hang up their aprons and jump in the car. Here, some of the city's best toques share their favorite restaurants on the road—and what you should order on your next weekend getaway.

Map for illustrative purposes only.

Keenan Langlois
DESTINATION: MARTHA'S VINEYARD

1 A TRIP TO THE VINEYARD IS A HOMECOMING for Keenan Langlois, who grew up on the island. He and his friends kick off the summer there with a trip to Coop de Ville for hot wings, stuffed quahogs and cold beer. "It's our ritual. The quahogs are ridiculous," he says. "I tried to reproduce them... but I think it has something to do with the setting—the beers, the sunset, sitting out on the harbor in sunglasses. It just only comes together if you're there." The 30-year-old restaurant is perched on the dock in Oak Bluffs, which has all the makings of a classic New England resort town—"cool restaurants and shops, beaches and a movie theater within walking distance"—and also boasts a site special to Langlois' boyhood: the Flying Horses Carousel, a national landmark that was constructed in 1876 and moved from Coney Island to Oak Bluffs in 1884. The oldest operating platform carousel in America is his can't-miss highlight while in town.

Robert Sisca
OF BISTRO DU MIDI
DESTINATION: NANTUCKET

2 ROBERT SISCA WILL BE ATTENDING HIS SIXTH Nantucket Wine Festival this month, but his sold-out May 15 wine dinner isn't the only thing on the itinerary—he's also looking forward to his annual meetup with a college roommate who lives on the island. Where they'll gather: Cru. "Going there and seeing their menu and what they're working with for the upcoming season is always inspirational," says Sisca, who praises the restaurant's raw bar. He returns to the island after the fest too, visiting twice a summer with his wife. And when he's not hitting the beach or the golf course, he's enjoying a sunny afternoon at the beer garden at Cisco Brewery or raising a toast at Lola 41. "That place serves great cocktails. If you're walking by, you just have to walk in—the spot is perfect."

Stacy Cogswell
OF LIQUID ART HOUSE
DESTINATION: CAPE COD

3 WHILE A DAY AT LIGHTHOUSE BEACH IN Chatham is a good excuse for Stacy Cogswell to kick back with old friends, those hours in the sun are spent anticipating her next stop: Kream 'n Kone in West Dennis. "I've been doing the same thing since I was a kid: You drive down early, and you get to the beach," she says. "But basically the day at the beach is the wait for the fried seafood!" Cogswell says she probably eats "at least a pound" of their clam strips, followed by strawberry soft serve in a waffle cone. But a different Cape staple inspired a dish on Liquid Art House's bar menu and in her forthcoming tome, The New New England Cookbook. "One of the things they do on the Cape that's hard to find anywhere else is clam cakes," she says. "They're heavy and cakey and thick. Over the past couple of years I've tried to recreate those as clam 'puffs.'" The choux batter with Old Bay Seasoning does less damage to the beach body, too.

Michael Schlow
DESTINATION: RHODE ISLAND

4 THE QUINTESSENTIAL FAMILY ROAD TRIP FOR Michael Schlow includes both the city and the seaside in a manageable distance—within the country's smallest state. While Newport and Jamestown may be the ultimate destinations for their beaches and golf courses, and possibly a trip to the jazz festival, the drives there and back both feature restaurants in Providence. For the perfect summer dish, his pick is the artfully crafted lobster roll at Hemenway's. And on the way back, he and his wife Adrienne always stop at Al Forno, because their kids love the grilled pizza. But no matter where he eats or imbibes, the setting often feels just as important as the food. "It's really about celebrating the summer and being outside," Schlow says. "We have a lot of friends there, and it's a rite to visit them every year. There's something so nostalgic about being together and enjoying good food in a coastal town."

BLUE HILL AT STONE BARNS

Jennifer Ziskin
DESTINATION: POCANTICO HILLS, NY

5 It may seem funny that the wine director and co-owner of La Morra's "all-time-favorite meal" included a hot dog. But it was just one dish in a multi-hour chef's tasting at Blue Hill at Stone Barns that offered more than dinner. "During the meal, they got us out of our seats to head to the grill for a beer pairing.... The chef was there answering all our questions. I loved how it gave us a reprieve from our seats and also a view of their amazing property," Ziskin says. That includes farmland where much of her dinner was grown, a nature preserve open for strolls, animals, a cafe and a store. "It's a village within itself, and you can easily spend an entire day there." She and husband Josh, chef and co-owner of La Morra, hope to take a similar approach with Heritage of Sherborn, the inn, restaurant, wine shop and provisions store featuring homemade pasta, bread and jams they're opening later this year. "Throughout the meal, I kept turning to Josh and saying, 'Can we do this at Heritage?' It was that inspiring!"

Joshua Smith
OF MOODY'S DELICATESSEN AND THE BACKROOM
DESTINATION: MARBLEHEAD

6 Joshua Smith may deal primarily in pork products as a charcutier, but he's just as passionate about the poultry at 5 Corners Kitchen. "The chicken is perfect. Hands down it's one of the best I've ever had. It's served with pan jus and greens," he says. "It's just simple and wonderful. The place is a real gem." Smith also praised a recent dinner featuring striped bass, a wine list that prices most bottles close to retail and a rotating menu that "sources the best products and treats them with the utmost respect." He struck up a friendship with 5 Corners chef Barry Edelman after meeting through a mutual friend during his very first trip to Marblehead, and he's quickly grown to love the town, working up an appetite for dinner at its beaches by day.

WOODMAN'S

BRINE

OF PURITAN & COMPANY
DESTINATION: GLOUCESTER

7 One of Will Gilson's favorite summer activities is heading to Gloucester with his fiancee to hit the deck at The Market Restaurant—but ironically he's never ordered anything from the Atlantic at the waterfront eatery. "You're under the impression you're going to get seafood when you come, and it's funny, I never have," he says. The closest he came was last summer's lobster hush puppies atop a grass-fed rib-eye. "The whole thing was just killer." Luckily, Gilson's jaunt northward on Route 128 often includes a stop at Woodman's in Essex, where he knocks seafood off his to-eat list ("I don't think anyone can hold a candle to their fried clams"). He also gives a nod to the North Shore roast beef shops along Route 1, such as Kelly's, Mike's and Anthony's. "It's a great part of our New England heritage." But no matter what the day's meals, a little bit of refreshment at Gloucester's Crow's Nest always pairs well. "It's the bar from The Perfect Storm. It's a little piece of our maritime New England life right there. You've got a Budweiser heavy and Keno. You really can't recreate places like that."

Joanne Chang
DESTINATION: NEWBURYPORT

8 It's no surprise dessert is on the menu when Boston's reigning pastry queen hits the road. Joanne Chang's trips to Newburyport are incomplete without a stop in an unassuming strip mall in nearby Salisbury, where Annarosa's Bakery beckons with its pies, scones and cookies. Even more irresistible are the artisanal breads. "They sell these huge focaccia pizzas that are as big as a pillow," she raves. "The crust is super-chewy and crispy, and they pile on the cheese!" If they haven't had their fill of cheese, she and husband Christopher Myers hit the Salisbury boardwalk for a beach-pizza pit stop, before heading to Newburyport to enjoy crudo at Brine. "They do a remarkable job with super-fresh fish and really simple, flavorful accompaniments," she says. One of their favorite activities is people-watching during a late lunch or early dinner; inevitably they see someone they know, since Myers grew up there. "It's a lovely walking town with vintage shops, ice cream parlors, unique window shopping and clothing stores and lots of restaurants.... We never go more than three blocks without Christopher running into an old high school friend he hasn't seen in 30 years. It never fails!"

EVENTIDE OYSTER CO.

Chris Coombs
OF BOSTON CHOPS, DBAR AND DEUXAVE
DESTINATION: WATERBURY, VT

11 THE VERMONT SPOTS WHERE CHRIS COOMBS forages for chanterelle mushrooms may be a secret he keeps close to the apron—but his admiration of the original Waterbury location of Hen of the Wood is not. "There are so many Boston restaurants, and we're all trying to work with the few local farms. And that area of Vermont—especially in season—has such an abundance of products," Coombs says. "There's a great representation of terroir and a real focus on local producers and products, from mushrooms to cheeses." And the landscape is an integral part of the experience, Coombs adds. "It's on a river. I think that's pretty cool. Hen of the Wood is a restaurant that's part of a place and time. It's in the middle of the country. It's beautiful, it's elegant, but not pretentious." Also unpretentious: grabbing dessert at the Ben & Jerry's headquarters with his wife, Viktoriya Coombs Bulavinova. And the cherry on top is a stay at Stowe's Topnotch Resort—especially a trip to the spa.

PORTLAND HUNT AND ALPINE CLUB

PRIMO

OF SWEET CHEEKS
DESTINATION: PORTLAND, ME

9 "I THINK THAT TRAVEL IS SO MUCH A PART OF what makes a chef a chef," says Tiffani Faison. "Even in our own backyard." And Portland provides her with inspiration, especially at Eventide Oyster Co. "It blew me away.... Everything there was ethereal and light and clean. They're incredibly talented at highlighting the seafood that they're presenting and cooking without getting in the way," she says. For instance, their flavored ices (featuring Tabasco and ginger) don't mask the flavor of the bivalves like traditional cocktail sauce. As for the actual cocktails, those are "incredible," as is Eventide's wine list. Portland Hunt & Alpine Club is also fun for spirits (try their housemade Americano aperitif). And for dessert, Ten Ten Pié and Two Fat Cats Bakery are winners, especially if it's Maine's fruit season. "That's one of the thing I love about road trips.... All rules are off. Kill yourself with dessert, especially in the summer, especially in that area. I'm looking for anything that has blueberries in it." Even Faison's souvenirs are edible, and she and her wife, Kelly Walsh, always pick up fish at Browne Trading Company on the way home.

OF RIALTO AND TRADE
DESTINATION: ROCKLAND, ME

10 JODY ADAMS SAYS PRIMO IS SO GOOD THAT she and her husband, Ken, couldn't help but dine there both nights they were in Rockland last summer. It's a good thing, too, because the menu changes daily depending on what meats, eggs and vegetables come from the restaurant's four-acre farm. "I just let Melissa [Kelly] choose for me," Adams says of her fellow Golden Whisk winner. "The property is spectacular," she adds. "Melissa [and her staff] have created a small farm with beautiful gardens. Each dish ... is always delicious. I love her Italian approach." A visit to Maine would be remiss without at least recognizing lobster, however, and Adams suggests a July visit for some unique local culture, like Rockland's Maine Lobster Festival (July 29-Aug. 2) or the Lobster Ride & Roll for cyclists (July 19). And a stop in Portland is "a must," not to mention the perfect halfway point for lunch at Duckfat, home of killer Belgian-style fries cooked in exactly what you'd expect.

Matt Jennings
OF TOWNSMAN
DESTINATION: BURLINGTON, VT

12 COOMBS ISN'T THE ONLY FAN OF HEN OF THE WOOD—Matt Jennings is so fond of it that he took his two co-chefs, Brian Young and Matt Leddy, on a road trip to the restaurant's new location last summer as a tutorial of sorts. Whether he's with them or on a weekend trip with his wife, pastry chef Kate Jennings, there's always something to do in Burlington. "The arts are huge, and we like trying to catch a show or live music, or go out for cocktails," Jennings says. And as a former Stowe resident, he knows all the best "watering holes"—some of them quite literal. "The area's especially fun in the summertime. It's fun to go for a hike with the dog and jump in some of the gorges," says Jennings, who likes to round out each trip up north by raising a glass with his friend Shaun Hill of Hill Farmstead Brewery in Greensboro.

AGENDA for 5/6–5/19

Win-Win

Roll with the punches.

IF THERE'S ONE DISEASE we'd really like to punch right in the face, it's cancer. Haymakers for Hope has the next best thing: the Rock 'N Rumble, the nonprofit's annual boxing event that has local pillars of the community suiting up and squaring off to raise money for the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Now in its fifth year, the Rumble features a lineup of 30 brave men and women, including Dana-Farber research scientist Dr. Quackenbush and Magellan Jets president Anthony Tivnan. The amateur fighters—who have been training hard for the big event—will box for three-minute rounds, but no matter who comes out victorious, the biggest win of the night will be moving one step closer to pummeling cancer. Get ready to rumble on May 14 at the House of Blues. / Alexandra Cavallo

The fifth annual Haymakers for Hope Rock 'N Rumble starts at 6:30 pm on May 14 at the House of Blues, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston. Tickets start at $75 at haymakersforhope.org

BOOZE WITH THE BARD

There are some people who find some of Shakespeare's plays a bit dry. They'd do well to check out Shit-Faced Shakespeare, a sampling of the Bard's work performed—very loosely—by U.K. comedic troupe Magnificent Bastards. They serve up some of Shakespeare's most famous plays with a side of the sauce, picking one actor at random to perform completely hammered at every show. And since it's no fun to drink alone, audience members are of course welcome to get sloshed alongside the evening's cock-eyed performer—the irreverent production is billed as both interactive and very rowdy. Check it out before it's tapped out at the Davis Square Theatre, where Shit-Faced Shakespeare plays through June 28. | Alexandra Cavallo

LIVE WIRE Talk about mommy issues. Academy Award-winning actress Joan Crawford became almost as well-known for her harsh parenting as for her films. The same medium that once made her famous eventually made her infamous thanks to Franky Perry's 1981 film Mommie Dearest, based on a scandalous memoir by Crawford's adopted daughter Christina. Initially markcted as a thriller, thc flick starring Faye Dunaway as a deranged Crawford and Mara Hobel as Christina carned cult comedy status for its campy portrayal of Crawford. Reviews by Brett Michel

THE AGE OF ADALINE ★★1/2 Owing a debt to both The Curious Case of Benjamin Button and The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford, Lee Toland Krieger's nutty confection plays like a literary adaptation, down to the narration provided by Hugh Ross, who performed this same vocal duty in the 2007 Western. However, this film's original fiction has less in common with the writing of F. Scott Fitzgerald and Ron Hansen than it does the cheese-filled weepies of Nicholas Sparks. Little surprise, since this picture's co-writer J. Mills Goodloe previously helped adapt Sparks' The Best of Me. Blake Lively plays Adaline Bowman, a 107-year-old beauty who hasn't added a single wrinkle since a 1937 accident froze her in the body of a 29-year-old. Fearing her secret might turn her into a guinea pig, Adaline has lived a largely solitary life, avoiding romantic entanglements. Alas, this unique cougar falls for the philanthropic Ellis Jones (Michael Huisman), setting her toward an unexpected reunion with a man she jilted in the '60s (Anthony Ingruber), who looked and sounded like a young Harrison Ford; he's affectingly played in the present by, well, Harrison Ford. Sweetly idiotic. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

CINDERELLA ★★★ Disney guaranteed audiences would show up for director Kenneth Branagh's live-action remake of their 1950 animated hit by preceding it with a 7-minute mini-sequel to the 2013 animated smash Frozen. But like most follow-ups, this short is a letdown. So, how nice that the main event is such a pleasant surprise. While not a musical retelling (sure to disappoint some Disneyphiles), it's nevertheless a worthy tribute. Starring Downton Abbey's Lily James as the would-be princess, this latest in Disney's recent spate of flesh-and-blood reconfigurations of its animated classics features a standout performance by Cate Blanchett as a more modern interpretation of Cinderella's stepmother, Lady Tremaine. Unsurprisingly, she attempts to stop her stepdaughter from slipping her perfectly fitting foot inside the famed glass slipper and winning the heart of her Prince Charming (Game of Thrones' Richard Madden). What is surprising, however, is that Tremaine is the only woman in the kingdom not to try on the crystalline pump. A cultured woman hoping to provide stability for her family, and she doesn't even try to claim a place as the new queen? This is a fairy tale! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

CLOUDS OF SILS MARIA ★★★1/2 You may not know his name, but know this: Olivier Assayas is one of our greatest living directors. The 60-year-old Frenchman continues to build upon an amazing filmography seen by few in the U.S. with his latest, a challenging drama about acting that comments on celebrity, gossip culture and young, overprivileged starlets. Talky to a fault, it features spectacular acting turns by Oscar winner Juliette Binoche as Maria Enders, an aging actress just past the peak of her international career, and Kristen Stewart as her personal assistant, Valentine. That's right, Twilight's mopey brunette is one of the film's many sly delights, offering a meta-commentary on her own persona in a production that recalls Bergman's chamber dramas, more specifically—and fittingly—Persona. Don't laugh: Stewart became the first American to ever win a Best Actress César (France's Oscar) with this performance, which builds upon her recent criminally unheralded work in Still Alice and the little-seen Camp X-Ray. But this is Binoche's show. As Maria's relationship with Valentine increasingly echoes that of the leads in the play she's rehearsing, Assayas comments no longer, allowing us to interpret his masterfully ambiguous ending. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

DANNY COLLINS ★1/2 "The following is kind of based on a true story," reads the onscreen text at the start of this maudlin mess of a movie, before it's qualified with the words "a little bit." Al Pacino embarrasses himself more than usual as the title character in the directorial debut of screenwriter Dan Fogelman, who pulls double duty as writer of this shameless treacle, which follows his script for Last Vegas, a film that offered crummy roles for no less than Robert De Niro, Michael Douglas, Kevin Kline and Morgan Freeman. Fogelman's nothing if not consistent. Danny Collins is an aging 1970s rocker who wears a girdle while croaking his signature hit, "Hey, Baby Doll," which sounds like a song Neil Diamond might have come up with, but nothing at all like something penned by the inspiration for Collins, British folk singer Steve Tilston. Like Collins, though, Tilston did discover a handwritten fan letter from John Lennon nearly 40 years after it was sent, but it's here that reality ends and Fogelman's schmaltzy fiction begins, prompting Collins to "embark on a heartfelt journey," according to the press notes. Don't believe it. Not even a little bit. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

THE DIVERGENT SERIES: INSURGENT ★★ This dystopian bore based on the middle installment of Veronica Roth's young adult novels once again stars Shailene Woodley as Katniss...err, Tris, and Theo James as, um, Four, placing them in the ruins of what had been Chicago. Tris, her brother Caleb (Ansel Elgort) and Four have been hiding from Jeanine (Kate Winslet), but when the villain's trigger-happy troops find them, the trio manage to escape on a speeding train, with Four leaping in front of it, like Superman. And why not? Even though the Divergent series has been packaged as a progressive girl-power showcase, this film backpedals on muscular feminism as it shifts the action focus onto Four, who saves Tris more than once. We discover that Tris' mother died in the previous movie not only protecting her daughter, but also trying to keep a totemic LED-bedazzled box (appearing nowhere in the novel) from falling into Jeanine's hands—which it does, anyway. Caleb helpfully tells Tris (and confused readers of the book) that it contains a Very Important Message from the Founders—which can only be accessed via Tris and her superb virtual reality video game skills. Or something. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Ex Machina ★★1/2 Many viewers of this science fiction thriller, the directing debut of Alex Garland, writer of Danny Boyle's 28 Days Later and Sunshine, will mispronounce the title of this movie, oblivious to its origins. This is probably for the best, since Garland's script isn't nearly as smart as he seems to think it is. Ostensibly, this is a film about the most advanced artificial intelligence ever created. Too bad writer/director Spike Jonze explored this concept far more effectively two years ago with his Oscar-winning script for Her, which featured a man falling in love with the operating system in his cellphone. That OS was voiced by an unseen Scarlett Johansson, while here, the AI is visibly embodied by Alicia Vikander as Ava. Caleb Smith (Domhnall Gleeson), a programmer at an Internet-search giant, has been brought to the private mountain estate of the company's brilliant CEO, billionaire recluse Nathan Bateman (Oscar Isaac), to evaluate Ava's human qualities, but is there more going on here? Sadly, yes, and the mystifying conclusion leaves you yearning for the halcyon days of murderous AI like 2001's HAL. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Far from the Madding Crowd ★★ Director Thomas Vinterberg has mounted a handsome adaptation of Thomas Hardy's mid-19th-century-set literary classic that's completely superfluous in the face of John Schlesinger's nearly three-hour 1967 version that's superior in every way. Although the Dane has filled his update with strong actors—Carey Mulligan as the self-willed Bathsheba Everdene and Matthias Schoenaerts, Michael Sheen and Tom Sturridge as her three wildly different suitors—they come across as children compared to the earlier cast, which featured British legends Julie Christie, Alan Bates, Peter Finch and Terence Stamp projecting far more palpable longing in the same roles, working from a script by Frederic Raphael that took its time establishing an air of violence that threatened to overtake the sweeping romance at any moment. Vinterberg's picture runs a hair under two hours with a script courtesy of David Nicholls (screenwriter of 2011's romantic drama One Day and author of the novel it's based on). The heat-lacking results play like CliffsNotes as composer Craig Armstrong's score lays the piano and violin strings on thick, overcompensating for the sexual chemistry that was presumably left on the cutting room floor, far from the screen. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Furious 7 ★★★ Before the title has even appeared onscreen in the seventh installment of The Fast and the Furious franchise, Jason Statham's Deckard Shaw has single-handedly destroyed much of a London hospital in his quest for vengeance against the people responsible for gravely injuring his little brother, Fast & Furious 6's baddie. His targets? The close-knit team of Dominic Toretto (Vin Diesel), who's first seen involving himself in a "Race War," which is more innocent than it sounds (this isn't Get Hard, people). Returning for one final ride is the late Paul Walker as Brian O'Conner. Walker, who died in an unrelated car wreck during production, is nevertheless introduced behind the wheel...of a minivan. Brian's now a dedicated dad, fitting with the series' sentimental focus on "family." Watching his son hurl toy cars, he tells the boy, "Cars don't fly." Except when they do. Whether dropped from planes, jumping off mountains or driven between two skyscrapers, Furious 7's exotic vehicles spend much of their time airborne. Switching lanes from horror to action, director James Wan (Saw, Insidious and The Conjuring) gets up to speed quickly, hardly letting off the gas as he steers Walker toward a graceful ride into the sunset. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Get Hard ★1/2 This Will Ferrell and Kevin Hart vehicle has taken a lot of knocks for its perceived racism and homophobia, but what's most offensive is how few jokes land, given what should have been a slam-dunk. Put these two side-by-side in the frame together, and Ferrell's oversized doughiness and Hart's diminutive feistiness could surpass Ferrell's delightful pairing with Mark Wahlberg in The Other Guys, a farce that knew what to do with its leads. That 2010 picture was directed by Ferrell's longtime comedy partner, Adam McKay, a man who knows how to frame a scene. Alas, McKay steps into a producing role here, allowing co-writer Etan Cohen (screenwriter behind 2006's Idiocracy and 2008's Tropic Thunder) to take the director's chair, and the first-timer fails to use the mismatched physiques of his two performers to any real advantage. Ferrell plays a wrongfully convicted millionaire investment banker who enlists the man who washes his car (Hart) to help him prepare for life behind bars, presuming that the black man must have done time. Many flaccid prison rape jokes follow, and although Cohen does have Ferrell bench-press Hart like a barbell, it's light lifting in a leaden satire. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

KINGSMAN: THE SECRET SERVICE ★★★ Matthew Vaughn reinvigorated Marvel Comics' X-Men for the big screen in 2011's X-Men: First Class, a period piece where he demonstrated an affinity for the swinging '60s, in addition to the command of action filmmaking and editing he'd displayed in 2010's Kick-Ass, his violent, entertaining deconstruction of the modern superhero movie, based on writer Mark Millar's comic book series. Now, Vaughn and regular collaborator Jane Goldman have freely adapted another Millar comic book, 2012's The Secret Service. Although set in the present, this affectionately winking, post-modern take on spy films aims squarely at the James Bond franchise, specifically the 1970s movies, with Oscar winner Colin Firth tapping into his inner Roger Moore as gentleman spy Harry Hart. He recruits "Eggsy" (newcomer Taron Egerton), who was Olympic material before he dropped out of the Royal Marines and into a life of petty crime. "The suit is the modern gentleman's armor," Hart tells the lad, and he's not kidding—the designer suits Eggsy's outfitted with are as bullet-proof as his ammunition-firing umbrella, and they'll be needed for all the over-the-top action and carnage ahead. If Bond's upper lip has grown too stiff for you, Eggsy's new breed of spy is bound to raise a few eyebrows. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

LITTLE BOY (No stars) Director/co-writer Alejandro Monteverde's ostensibly faith-based family film is set during World War II on U.S. soil (but shot in Mexico), and it keenly illustrates the terrible racism directed toward Japanese Americans during that era—before the message gets lost. Jakob Salvati plays an 8-year-old who's been derogatorily dubbed "Little Boy" due to his diminutive stature. After his dad (Michael Rapaport) is shipped off to war, Little Boy becomes convinced that he holds the power to move mountains simply by extending his hands and gritting his teeth. Spoiler alert: The film pretty much believes it, too. In the big climax, Little Boy thinks he's magically freed his father from a POW camp—an idea reinforced by the local townspeople, who excitedly show him the newspaper headline "LITTLE BOY ENDS WAR!" That's right: The movie posits that this adorable little moppet—who earlier exclaimed, "If I could, I'd smash every Jap with my bare hands!"—has willed the atomic murder of hundreds of thousands of Japanese civilians. Gleefully running through his California town, he shouts, "I did it!" as his neighbors pat his back and cheer. Profoundly disturbing and unbelievably grotesque. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

TRUE STORY ★★1/2 British theater director Rupert Goold makes his feature debut with this character study, which he's adapted from disgraced New York Times reporter Michael Finkel's memoir, and his stage roots show. Michael (Jonah Hill) appears mostly in two locations: the Montana home he shares with his wife, Jill (Felicity Jones), and inside the visitation room at the Oregon jail where accused murderer Christian Longo (James Franco) awaits trial. Michael seeks redemption in writing a book about Longo, a man who used his name and identity to evade an FBI manhunt. While the relationship and dialogue that develops between these two recalls Capote, Bennett Miller's superior 2005 drama was anchored by a superb Oscar-winning performance by Philip Seymour Hoffman. Funnyman Hill does well with another dramatic role, but Franco fails to rise to the occasion. It's Jones, however, who truly shines. And while I doubt there's much truth to Jill's contrived scene opposite Christian, it's nevertheless a well-written one in which she performs masterfully. Unfortunately, when the information appearing in a printed onscreen coda is more interesting than the events depicted during the previous 95 minutes, that's another truth that's hard to deny. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

THE WATER DIVINER ★1/2 Russell Crowe makes his debut behind the camera and also stars in front of it, playing Joshua Connor, an Australian farmer who's grieving the deaths of his three sons when their mother, Lizzie (Jacqueline McKenzie), takes her own life. The year is 1915, and Joshua decides to honor a promise he made to her by traveling to Gallipoli, where their boys were cut down in battle, and bringing their bodies back home to be reunited with their mom in consecrated ground. If only it were that easy. Although claiming to be inspired by true events, Andrew Knight and Andrew Anastasios' script layers contrivance on top of cliche as Joshua's travels through Turkey find him making a series of narrow escapes from bureaucratic red tape, racial discrimination, residual wartime violence and romantic tension with the proprietress (Olga Kurylenko) of an Istanbul hotel, where he befriends her fatherless boy (Dylan Georgiades). He also comes to respect "Hassan the Assassin" (a stern-faced Yilmaz Erdogan), the major who led the charge against the Connor boys' regiment; this section works fairly well, until Crowe's earnestness is eclipsed by his mawkish sightseeing. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

WHILE WE'RE YOUNG ★★★ Noah Baumbach's eighth film as a writer/director opens with some pointed onscreen quotes from Henrik Ibsen's The Master Builder, establishing the animosity those in middle age exhibit toward the younger generation. Documentary filmmaker Josh (Ben Stiller, star of Baumbach's acerbic 2010 film Greenberg) and his wife/producer Cornelia (Naomi Watts) are a middle-aged couple who open their door to nascent documentarian Jamie (Adam Driver, from Baumbach's last film, 2012's Frances Ha) and ice cream maker Darby (Amanda Seyfried), a much younger couple who crash Josh's continuing-education class. Subtly humorous, naturalistic dialogue lifts Baumbach's best pictures past many of his contemporaries', but it's when he gets bogged down in plot machinations that his movies can sometimes suffer—and there's a surfeit of plot here. Duplicities pile up, as do resentments, but this film isn't Greenberg. The honesty can still be bitter at times, but there's a newfound sweetness that's crept into Baumbach's last two pictures. With the passage of time comes the realization that the cruelty of life doesn't have to sting so hard when tempered with the love of a partner. That, and a good bottle of Scotch to share. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

WOMAN IN GOLD ★★ While the titular Gustav Klimt painting, referred to as "the Mona Lisa of Austria," is a masterpiece, director Simon Curtis' film about an octogenarian woman's fight to reclaim the famous portrait of her aunt is anything but. The maudlin script by first-time screenwriter Alexi Kaye Campbell doesn't do any favors for Helen Mirren or Ryan Reynolds, the wildly mismatched actors who portray the elderly Jewish woman, Maria Altmann, and her inexperienced young lawyer, Randy Schoenberg, as they fight the Austrian establishment to reclaim the artwork that Nazis stole from her Viennese family. A flashback structure finds Altmann portrayed in her younger years by a surprisingly credible Mirren stand-in, Orphan Black star Tatiana Maslany, but her flight to America alongside her husband (Max Irons) is presented in a hackneyed thriller fashion that cheapens the power of the story, which isn't helped by the paint-by-numbers screenplay that puts as much emphasis on Schoenberg's family as it does Altmann's. True, his grandfather was a famed Austrian composer whose family also fled the Nazis, but Schoenberg's domestic and workplace dramas have little of the resonance of Altmann's larger story. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

LISTEN UP Don't be fooled by the cherubic face and tousled curls—the Kooks' frontman, Luke Pritchard, is no angel. He's struggled with alcohol dependence, has had well-publicized dalliances with several models and once kicked Arctic Monkeys singer Alex Turner in the face. But Pritchard has wrestled his many demons into Listen, the latest release from the decade-old English indie rock band, which marks a jazzy, funky departure from their earlier Britpop fare. The album also experiments with more mature lyrical themes, evident in tracks like "See Me Now," Pritchard's touching missive to his late father. Catch an evolved Kooks on May 10 at the House of Blues. / Hannah Landers

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

PLAYTHINGS In Toy Stories, photographer Gabriele Galimberti channels his inner kid, capturing children alongside an assortment of their treasured toys. His subjects include Noel from Texas, an aspiring pilot with a fleet of plastic planes, and Maudy (pictured), a young Zambian girl who found her trove of sunglasses in a box on the street in her village. The series showcases cross-cultural similarities—multiple kids cherish dinosaurs—and differences: A Beijing boy fancies Monopoly because of his city's bustling development, while a rural Mexican boy collects trucks that resemble the vehicles he sees at nearby sugar plantations. The Flash Forward Festival brings Toy Stories and five other exhibits to shipping containers along the Greenway, where visitors can play at the makeshift gallery through May 31. / Sarah Hagman

BIRDS OF A FEATHER

When it was announced earlier this year that, after half a century, a sequel to Harper Lee's To Kill a Mockingbird was forthcoming, many Atticus Finch fans rejoiced. But as it turns out, the author's personal story is as compelling as that of Scout and Boo Radley. In The Mockingbird Next Door: Life with Harper Lee, Chicago Tribune reporter Marja Mills shares how she set out to interview Lee but found more than just a story, eventually developing a friendship with the famously reclusive writer and her sister Alice, even moving in next door. She'll offer a rare look into their lives on May 14, when she flies into Brookline Booksmith. / Kyle Grace Mills

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 playlist, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mo-

saic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

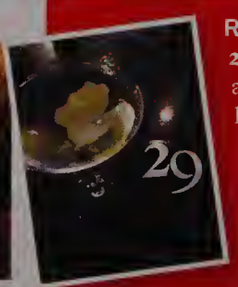
THE GECKO FROM GEICO WOULD BE MORE IMPRESSIVE

Producing free, world-class Shakespeare on Boston Common for 20 years is no small feat, so it was no small fete when Commonwealth Shakespeare Company hosted its 20th anniversary gala at the Mandarin Oriental.

The Midsummer Night's Dream-themed evening began with cocktails and a killer silent auction and continued with dinner, dancing and general mayhem. Prominent among the throng: co-chairs Susan Poduska and Sam Mazzarelli, the soignee Diana Rowan Rockefeller, éminence grise James Cannon Boyce (wearing boots made out of springbok), Brazilian glamazon Sinesia Karol, the aptly named Caesar Belbel with the stunningly lovely Leah Talanian, the absurdly handsome Frank Amelia and his smoldering husband, Stephen Labuda, redheaded arts booster Kate Shamon and her adoring other half, Andy Rushford, bejeweled brunette Lori Sullivan, the inimitable Doris Yaffe, South End hotties Kurt Gress and Samuel Parkinson, Boston's answer to Martha Stewart, Liz Georgantas, and the dashing Peter, and one woman who said, "This dress is Dolce & Gabbana, but I'm telling all my gay friends it's Valentino."

Throughout the evening, artist Percy Fortini-Wright painted an original work that was auctioned off at the end of the night by news cutie Janet Wu, while the dance floor had even a certain octogenarian shaking her groove thang.

The award for worst attempt at name-dropping, meanwhile, went to the person who said, "A friend of a friend knows Flo from Progressive."



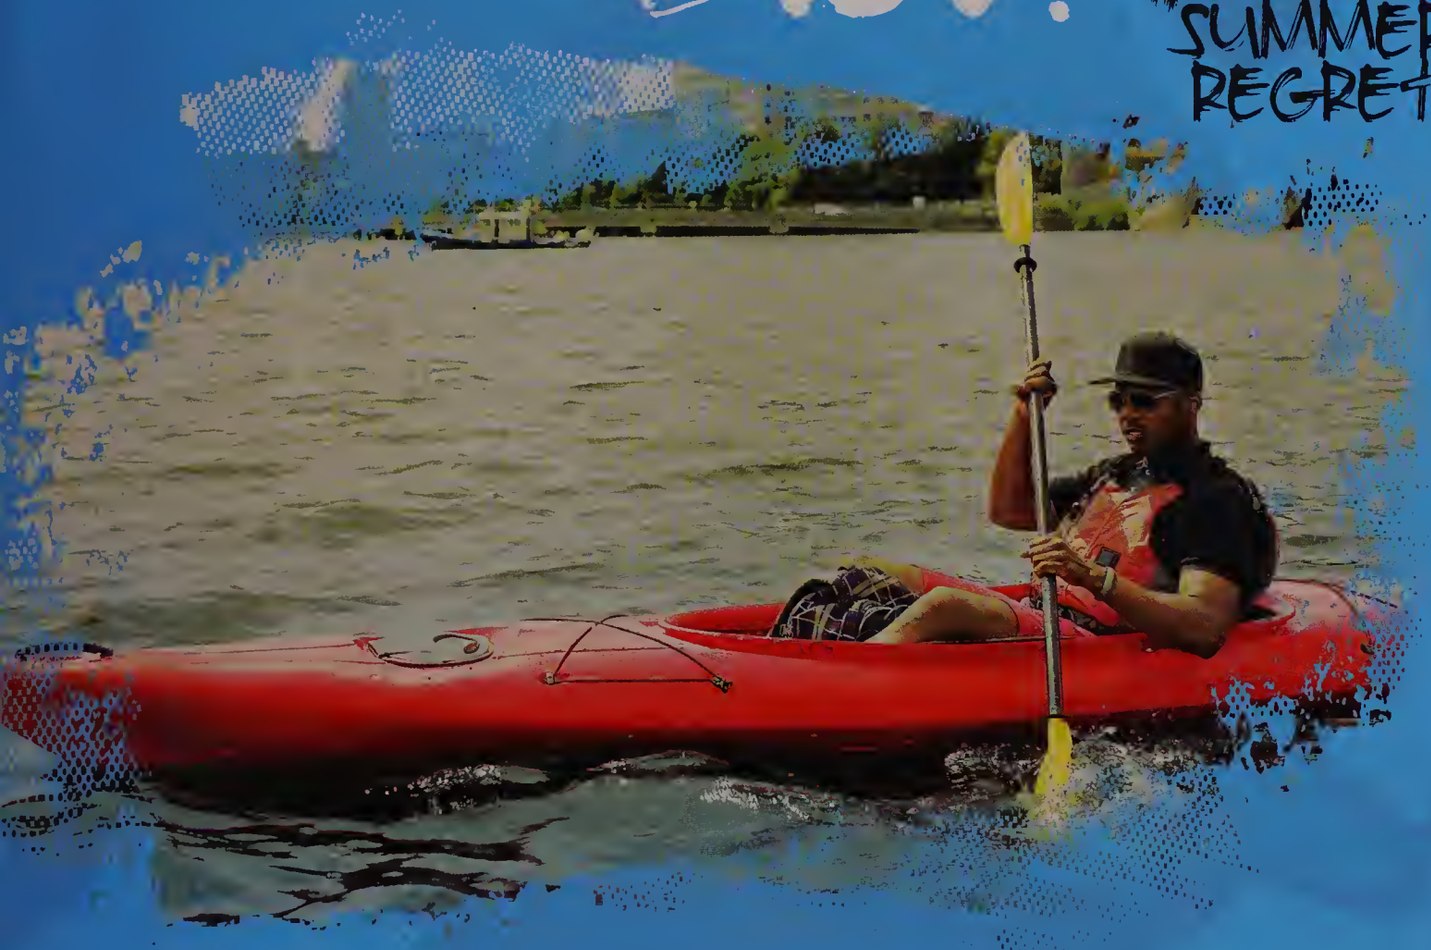
BEATS A WHALEBONE CORSET

Pop quiz: What's the oldest continually performing arts organization in America? Answer: The Handel and Haydn Society, which celebrated its 200th—yes, 200th—anniversary at the Society Ball, transforming Symphony Hall into a setting as grand as the occasion called for.

Cocktails were served in the Cabot-Cahners Room, and then guests filtered into the hall, decked to the nines. Ringed around the first balcony was a chorus who kicked off an evening of stellar performances that included maestro Harry Christophers conducting the period instrument orchestra and solo violinist Aisslinn Nosky, after which society band leader Bo Winiker got things percolating on the dance floor.

The strictly A-list crowd included former presidential adviser David Gergen and his brilliant therapist wife, Anne, musical patron Bill Achtmeyer with the flawless Alli, Beacon Hillions Wat and Jane Tyler, Chestnut Hill lovebirds Adam and Michael Oliveri, the sister act of Pam Martin and Liz Raddock with their other halves, Jonathan and Dan respectively, the irresistible duo of Michael Tilley and Peter Griglik, WGBH sex symbol Jared Bowen, investing oracle Peter Lynch, force of nature Enid Beal and her main squeeze, Alan Wolfe, 2016 campaign bigwig Mark Walsh and his glittering other half, Bryan Rafanelli, MFA curator Frederick Ilchman, the always dapper Michael Forrester with his delectable cupcake, Courtney, and one woman who said, "It's amazing that she has such nice shoes; she lives in Vermont."

However, the evening's funniest comment was "If I pass out, please pull my Spanx off so I regain circulation." ◆



REQUIEM FOR A FRIEND

29 Newbury was not just a bar and restaurant. It was a clubhouse, a meeting place, an institution. It was a salon as much as a saloon. For its entire 32-year run, it served as the de facto Back Bay living room to everyone who walked through its doors—and everyone who was anyone walked through those doors at some point, from rock stars and royalty to the motley crew of regulars who could dependably be found crowded around the bar. I was one of them. I started going there with a fake ID in the '80s. There was even a period of time when my mail was delivered there. An ex of mine was once traveling in Nepal and met two women who were going to be passing through Boston. He gave them a bag with a tag that said, "Please deliver to 29 Newbury St. for Jonathan Soroff." Inside was a gift I still have. I ate dinner there with Julia Child and Jacques Pepin and another time attended the only drag baby shower I've ever heard of. If a bar like Cheers ever existed, it was 29. And if everybody didn't know your name, they'd quickly saddle you with an appropriate nickname—Auntie Chianti, Robbio, Pedro de Refreshment. It was one of the few bars where no one felt awkward walking in alone. And now my Honeycomb Hideout is gone. On April 18, the last martini was shaken and the lights were turned off. So long, old haunt. I might have forgotten a lot that happened there, but the memories I do have are priceless.

LIFE'S A BEACH

MAY MIGHT JUST BE MY FAVORITE month. The lilacs certainly don't hurt, but it's mostly because the whole summer is still stretched out in front of us. And putting together our Summer Preview has only added to the anticipation. In this issue, the staff rounds up a ton of summer fun, from art walks and booze cruises to free concerts and al fresco film screenings. Elsewhere, Paul Robicheau takes a closer look at the season's top festival bills, Ezra Dyer offers some pro tips for planning your summer vacation and Lydia Santangelo hits a North Shore beach for a fierce fashion shoot. Meanwhile, on a beach on the other side of the country, we photographed our cover subject, Tone It Up co-founder, reality TV star and former Bostonian Katrina Scott, whose boundless positivity has helped inspire a devoted fitness following. Hope the start to your summer is equally sunny.

FROZEN FEVER

THIS SUMMER, WE'RE ALL SCREAMING FOR GELATO.

HOLLY RIKE

TOWER OF TREATS: Gelato makes macarons even tastier.

OUTSIDE THE CUP

Opened in late March, Newbury Street's Amorino offers 24 flavors of gelato, but they aren't just scooped into the expected cups and cones—they also wind up atop waffles and inside frozen macarons, crepes and brioche. "We're always researching ways to expand Amorino's offerings while staying focused on our expertise—gelato," owner Léa Sasportes explains. The macarons, made exclusively for the European-based chain, come in eight flavors, including chocolate, pistachio, caramel and the Nutella-like L'Inimitable.

Whole Gelato Love

Joining the ranks of sports cars and designer handbags, America's favorite summer treat, ice cream, has gotten a sexy Italian upgrade. New gelato shops selling the slow-churned Italian dessert—traditionally richer and made with less sugar and butterfat than ice cream—are popping up in Chestnut Hill and Back Bay, and the new Babbo Pizzeria e Enoteca is serving up a housemade version in flavors like corn, cantaloupe, Harpoon stout and even olive oil. "It's so unique," says pastry chef Kazimir Puntarovic, "and the flavor is incredible."

And in West Roxbury, 23-year-old Pamela Bardhi has opened Ria Cafe, a European-style gelato cafe that also offers locally made pastries and Lavazza espresso. Bardhi grew up around restaurants (her family owns West Napoli Pizza next door), but she developed her own business model as a senior at Stonehill College to fill a void she saw in the market. "The nearest gelato shop is miles away from here," she says, "so I figured I wanted to bring something unique to my culture."

Bardhi sources Ria's gelato from a supplier in Malden who makes fresh batches at least twice a week. The signature flavor is the indulgent Champagne-dipped strawberry with milk chocolate shavings, but the shop also has non-dairy fruit sorbetti to round out its 16 rotating options. Sweet treats further abound with gelattes—lattes made with gelato—and imported Belgian chocolates. Says Bardhi, "It's like a dessert heaven." / Meghan Kavanaugh

THE INSIDE SCOOP

Chef Morgan Morano spent six years mastering gelato making in Florence before opening her Morano Gelato shop in Hanover, New Hampshire. A second location is set to open in late May at the Mall at Chestnut Hill, but in the meantime, you can take a page from Morano's cookbook, The Art of Making Gelato, which hit shelves last month. She shared some DIY know-how:

- "Truly traditional ingredients start with fresh and ripe local fruit and then quality ingredients from Italy that contribute to common gelato flavor profiles, such as pistachios from the Bronte region of Sicily... and hazelnuts from Piedmont."
- "Scooping with a spade—'spatola'—not only shows a respect for the art of serving Italian gelato...but it also indicates a warmer temperature of the product."
- "At home, most countertop machines do not differentiate between gelato and American ice cream—instead, the recipes help distinguish between the two."

Look Back and Say, "YUP."

HOW RUEDA!

Having recently revisited the wine region of Rueda in northwestern Spain, I find it easy to rank it among the most remarkable vineyard areas in the world. The older vines there resemble giant clenched fists the size of tree trunks. Planted on precipitous slopes, they emerge from rocks and sand, not from anything resembling soil, to produce super-concentrated white wine nectars full of rich fruit flavors and firm structure. The wind-swept region's heart and soul is the noble but little-known verdejo grape, and these are three of the most authentic picks. / Sandy Block

NISIA "OLD VINES" RUEDA, 2013
Pearlike and floral, its round, soft texture showcases a mellow fruit expression, hints of lemon peel and a touch of chalky minerality. This wine is ultra-versatile: Its exuberant acids complement raw shellfish, while it has sufficient "old vine" weight to balance a cold lobster salad.
$19, Winestone, Chestnut Hill

SHAYA RUEDA, 2012
This verdejo is another that originates from venerable vine stocks. It is slightly herbal and honeyed in scent, with a creamy texture and hints of nutmeg, melon and clove. A gentle, smooth middleweight wine, with a spicy mineral personality, it goes beautifully with paella.
$20. BRIX Wine Shop, South End

OSSIAN RUEDA, 2010
Produced from organically grown grapes, the Ossian is full of honey and luscious ripe pear scents. Velvety on the palate, it has a concentrated melange of orange, green olive, lime and dried apricot flavors that evolve into a long, slightly bitter exotic spice finish. It matches best with grilled swordfish.
$45, wine-searcher.com

CALL ME MAYBE

DEAR RED LINE LOVER: I met you on the Red Line platform on Valentine's Day early in the morning. (Thank goodness for late-night service.) You had just come from a house party. When we parted ways, I wished that we had exchanged numbers. By some miracle, we encountered each other again just before I left town for a conference in Florida. Call me crazy, but I just feel so comfortable talking to you, and I'd like to get to know you better. I propose a third meeting in the spot where we parted ways twice. You know the station—send me a sign. Now that we're on a first-name basis, you can try to find me if you remember where I work. Either way, I am hoping to see you one more time.

— Third time's the charm

TO EVERYONE IN MY CAR ON THE GREEN LINE THIS MORNING: You're actually the worst. After I got out of my seat to accommodate the (somewhat pushy) woman who directly requested that I move so she could sit and avoid a medical emergency, a small elderly woman shuffled onto the train. I did my best to act as a human shield for the next 30 minutes, but she still got jostled by backpacks while no one offered her a seat. Have some respect, folks.

— Happy to now have a parking spot

DEAR WAITER AT APPLEBEE'S: Thank you for pretending not to recognize me and my roommate when we saw you downtown, very, very far away from your place of employment. We were really proud of ourselves for not going to get half-priced appetizers and sangria-ritas in yoga pants again. (But we totally miss you—we'll be back this week.)

Q&A SCENE QUEEN

New York-based, New Hampshire-bred photographer Jessica Craig-Martin has made a career shooting the lifestyles of the rich and famous. Known for her often subversive photographs of glamorous subjects, Craig-Martin has seen her work appear in Vogue, Vonity Foir and museums from the Guggenheim to the Whitney. Her latest exhibit, the 44-banner photo series Objects of Desire, makes its debut on May 21 at The Street in Chestnut Hill. / Alexondro Covollo

LUXE LIFE: Objects of Desire is on view through fall. Visit improper.com for more from Jessica Craig-Martin.

WHAT DREW YOU TO PHOTOGRAPHY—AND TO SHOOTING CELEBRITIES IN PARTICULAR? I think I have always been a social anthropologist by nature. So there is that element. But I also love the purely visual, sensual element of clashing colors and textures; furs, silks, lips, jewels and bare skin are all there for me to play with. I forget everything else when I'm shooting. It's like an altered state—a blissful one.

WHAT DO YOU THINK MAKES SOMETHING AN OBJECT OF DESIRE, BEYOND THE OBVIOUS IDEAS OF LUXURY OR SEX APPEAL? Perversity and advertising.

YOU'VE SHOT FOR SOME BIG NAMES. WHAT WAS YOUR FAVORITE SHOOT OF ALL TIME? My favorite occasion to shoot is the annual amfAR benefit gala in Cannes. It requires a full avalanche of excess to properly honor that excellent cause. Where else can you see Madonna auction off the contents of her handbag, or Sharon Stone in a diamond neck brace and a mile of leopard chiffon, weeping with joy as she announces her new pediatric AIDS center in Tel Aviv, or see people bid millions vying for a ticket into space with notorious anthrophobe Leonardo DiCaprio? ... As a social anthropologist and unapologetic lover of luxe, I am fascinated to witness the proceedings of such an event. We live in the time of the Mega Benefit Gala. Welcome to the circus!

FAVORITE SUBJECT YOU'VE CAPTURED? Elizabeth Taylor, late in life: looking bored, dripping in diamonds and being borne into the party, supine on a palanquin, by men in tuxedos.

HOW ABOUT A DREAM SUBJECT, SOMEONE YOU'VE YET TO SHOOT? I'm a huge Cher fan.

WHERE WOULD YOU PHOTOGRAPH CHER? In her walk-in mink and thong closet.

THERE'S THAT OLD SUPERSTITION ABOUT HOW A CAMERA CAN STEAL A PERSON'S SOUL. IF YOU COULD STEAL A LITTLE BIT OF ANY ONE PERSON'S SOUL THROUGH YOUR CAMERA, TO HOLD ONTO FOR YOURSELF, WHOSE WOULD IT BE? I wouldn't mind having a little [socialite and arts philanthropist] Yvonne Force Villareal in my soul. Maybe that's why I take her picture so much. Watch out Yvonne!

UPGRADE
AHEAD OF THE CURVE

Prepsters weary of Nantucket Reds, meet Harding-Lane, a line from Dedham siblings Stephen and Sarah Gifford specializing in canvas baseball hats ($35 at harding-lane.com) adorned with needlepoint New England icons, from lobsters to lacrosse players. The sibs donate a portion of profits to the Trustees of Reservations, a nonprofit dedicated to protecting Massachusetts land, so grab one before Cape season kicks off. / Alexandra Cavallo

BOWLED OVER: Pork-centric ramen headlines Strip-T's new menu.

Good Eats: Ramen Warrior

If any other chef were adding ramen to his menu right now, you might say he's late to the party. But since it's Momofuku alum Tim Maslow, there are no quibbles—simply high expectations. The deep bowl, a headlining item on Strip-T's new izakaya-inspired dinner menu, delivers a lush three-day pork broth teeming with loads of pork (char-siu and ultra-tender neck), springy noodles, a soft soy egg, menma, greens, scallions and toasty sheets of nori. But the biggest draw might be found in the hashtag: #ramenwithplentyofparking. / Elizabeth Bomze

BUSY BUSINESS: Chef Chris Henry will take on four different kitchens when the eclectic restaurant opens this summer.

BIG AMBITIONS

Coppersmith
40 W. Third St., Boston
coppersmithboston.com

THE OPTIONS FOR BOTH FOOD and ambience at the forthcoming Coppersmith in South Boston are numerous. But before you can even begin to explore the scope of the restaurant—the 60-seat outdoor patio, the 80-seat roof deck, the 138-foot bar, the two food trailers parked inside and the 37-foot Airstream trailer housing a raw bar parked on the roof—let this nugget from co-owner Travis Talbot sink in: "In the daytime, we're actually going to be operating as one of the largest coffee shops on the East Coast."

Coppersmith's cafe will operate from 6 am to 4 pm, with grab-and-go snacks like a beet salad, sandwiches and the requisite coffee and pastries. There will also be dozens of electrical outlets and a Wi-Fi signal with enough juice to fuel those who need to boot up for business.

The enormity of the space—and the ambitions of those behind the project—has led to a few delays and concept tweaks since Talbot teamed up with co-owners John Childs and Franklin Ferguson. "It was originally supposed to be about a 40- to 50-seat restaurant, and the next thing you know—two and a half years later—we're building out 15,000 square feet," Talbot says.

All that square footage, with 22-foot ceilings, atrium skylights and long communal tables, will give Coppersmith a beer hall feel—complemented by a selection of 12 drafts and numerous bottle and can beers from nano- and microbreweries. As for the food, Chris Henry (Barbara Lynch Gruppo) has been tasked with running the four kitchens that will feed the restaurant, which has a capacity of 350. The primary kitchen will prepare a menu of snacks, shareable plates and entrees such as lobster fritters with pimento aioli, grilled asparagus with a poached farm egg and pecorino, and a fig- and pomegranate-glazed Moroccan lamb dinner. That menu will be offered 4 pm to 1 am, but beforehand, customers will be able to grab food from the cafe or from the two food trailers operating from 11 am to 11 pm. Unless there's a pop-up or a chef challenge, those trailers will run under the supervision of Henry, dishing out a variety of globally influenced street food.

"The nice thing about the trucks is it gives us a lot of latitude without having to be worried about an identity crisis," Talbot says. "And they essentially can be two competition kitchens."

The competition kitchen vibe will be readily apparent when Coppersmith hosts community events; Talbot says at least 15 events with proceeds benefiting charity are already in the works. It's an aspect of the business that he hopes will help Coppersmith feel like a neighborhood restaurant.

"The space lends itself to stuff like that," says Talbot, who hopes to open Coppersmith before July Fourth. "That area is just booming. There's not enough seats to entertain the palates in the area."

FEELING PUNCHY

DAVID PUNCH MUST HAVE AN affection for tiny spaces, as evidenced by his yet unnamed new restaurant fitting only 19 seats. But it's his affection for what he calls East Asian soul food that is expected to grab customers at the forthcoming eatery at 1247 Centre St. in Newton Centre, just a hop, skip and jump from Sycamore, where Punch is chef and co-owner.

Punch and partners Shane Smyth (Sycamore) and Alison Hearn (formerly of Myers & Chang and B&G Oysters) picked Daniel Scott to lead the kitchen. Scott, who previously worked at Blue Ginger and currently serves as sous-chef at the also tiny Sycamore, will dish out everything from Korean home cooking to ramen and street food-inspired snacks, all at reasonable price points, daily from 11 am to 1 am. "We want people to be able to come here all the time," Hearn says.

WAKE-UP CALL: Davio's new Sunday brunch is well worth dragging yourself out of bed.

BRUNCH BOOM

BRUNCH OPTIONS IN BOSTON MAY ABOUND, BUT Davio's new Sunday brunch is worth your attention. Touching all the usual brunch bases—free-range eggs, waffles, pancakes and bagels—the menu then moves on to some more interesting options like a sampler plate of Davio's justifiably famous spring rolls (shrimp cotija with citrus aioli was a standout), which make you feel as if you were enjoying perfect wedding reception hors d'oeuvres without the hassle of, well, a wedding. They're ideal for sharing, as is the white cheese pizza with bacon, egg, scallions and white truffle oil. Check out the tableside Bloody Mary cart, and don't forget dessert; perhaps the warm cinnamon apple tart stuffed with almond paste?

Beyond brunch, Davio's is also marking a big anniversary; it's been 30 years since Steve DiFillippo took over the flagship restaurant in Back Bay, transforming it into a brand that now has seven locations along the East Coast. Word to the wise: An eighth location will open in Los Angeles, most likely this fall.

TRIP THRIFT

When Boris Mordkovich started a company that produced electric bikes in Asia a few years back, he was young and strapped for cash, so he had to find inventive ways to visit suppliers. His experiments with travel hacking spawned his new venture Travel Masters Academy, which offers classes in Boston and online that make use of existing but often little-understood programs set up by airlines, hotels and other organizations that allow would-be globetrotters to travel on the cheap. Very cheap. "The goal is to enable all of our students to fly to at least two vacations, anywhere in the world, every year for less than $100 per flight," he says. We tapped him for a few pointers. / Alexandra Cavallo

One go-to travel hack? American Airlines offers a special off-peak frequent-flier award chart where you can fly to Europe for seven months out of the year using just 40,000 American Airline miles. You can get 50,000 miles by opening up a single credit card, which will get you a free round-trip flight from anywhere in the U.S. to anywhere in Europe.

Best deal you've ever swung? About a year ago, I flew to China for a week for work and then on the way back was able to get a free one-week stopover in Ethiopia. Because the airline allowed a free stopover for up to 364 days and didn't actually care where it was—who said it has to be logical?—I was able to visit two continents for the cost of a single award flight. The total cost was 70,000 frequent flier miles and $120 in taxes and fees.

Tip for traveling on the cheap? I'm a huge fan of using Airbnb.com. I've had some incredible experiences, from a houseboat in LA to a jungle house in Hawaii. Ask the host if they can offer you a 20 percent discount—I found that in more than half the instances, they'll say yes!

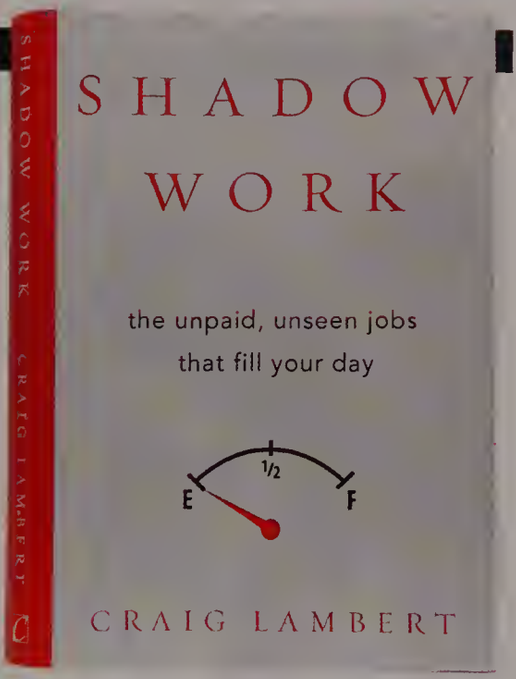
LOG ON, CLOCK IN

A FORMER HARVARD MAG SCRIBE LOOKS AT OUR HIDDEN SECOND SHIFTS.



HOLLY RIKE

SHADOW WORK* by Craig Lambert
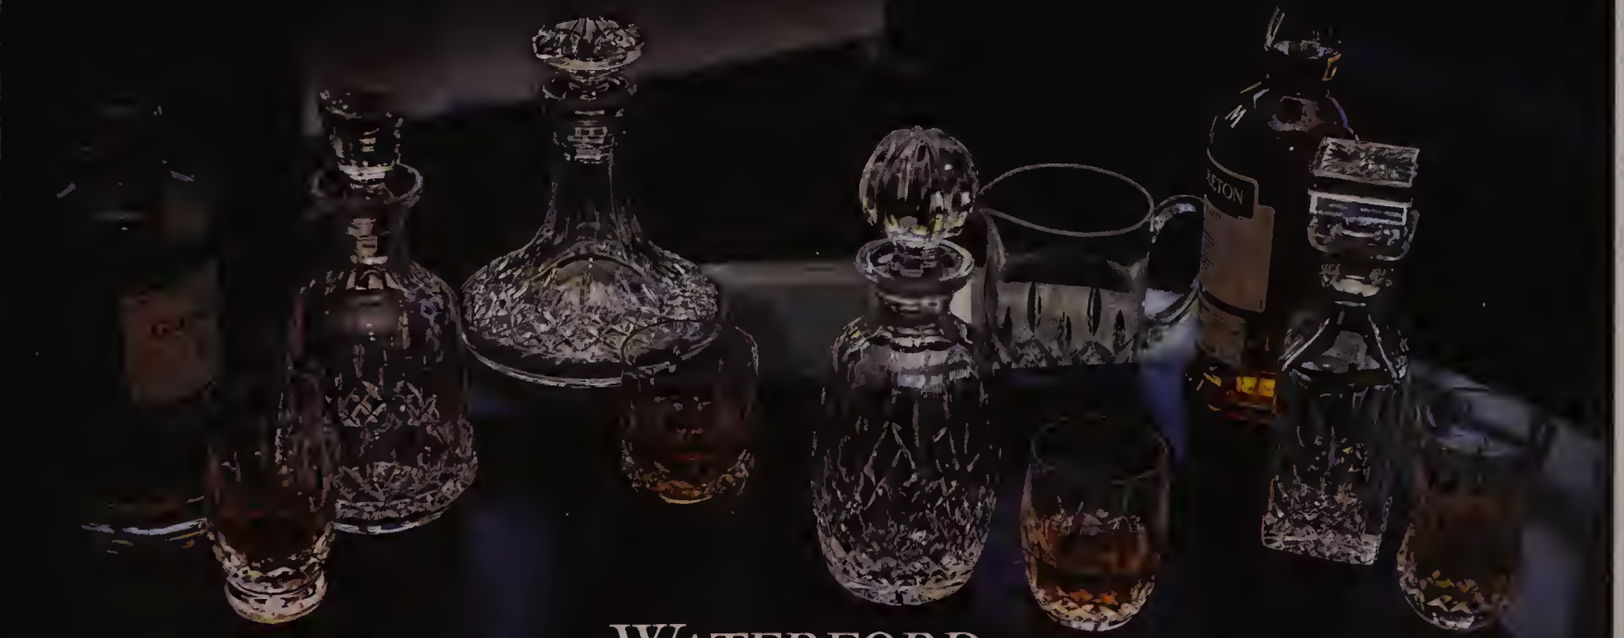
Published by Counterpoint, 304 pages, $26



YOUR NINE-TO-FIVE JOB—THE ONE WITH the paycheck attached—is but a sliver of the work you actually do, says Craig Lambert, a former writer and editor at Harvard Magazine. Here, he susses out the metastasizing situations in which we perform unpaid work for businesses. Take self-service checkouts at grocery stores, food-dispensing kiosks and sterile ATM machines that have replaced paid jobs behind the counter. More human, but still time-consuming, are the Little Leagues and other youth sports teams organized by parent volunteers—worthwhile, but comodifying what was once kids' joyous back-lot play and pleasure.

Lambert finds lots of shadow work online. Businesses increasingly rely on user-generated content, and while you surf on Facebook, the company makes your "likes" available to hungry commercial entities. Proliferating medical, legal and travel information makes us all "mini-professionals," lessening actual professionals' power—sometimes good for us, though not always, and it's always time-consuming. And as "meeting" online replaces face-to-face connecting, with both pluses and minuses, dating sites double as data mines. With wry wit and interesting tales of this tectonic (or should we say techtonic) shift, Lambert laments the loss of human connection this screen-gazing entails—the time wasted, the expertise compromised and the money unearned by both shadow workers and would-be employees.

FROM PAGE 182: The ceaseless marketplace also puts a certain psychological dynamic in play. Where there is a chance *to buy, sell, trade, research, review or otherwise connect with the marketplace, that possibility preys on your mind. ISLAND HIDEAWAY: Islamorada's Pelican Cove unveiled a new look in December.

The Escape Artist / Renata Certo-Ware

TURN TO THE KEYS

HEAD SOUTH TO THE EDGE OF THE CONTINENT—THEN KEEP DRIVING.

Named "The Purple Island" by Spanish settlers, Islamorada in the Florida Keys is today just as renowned for its fishing as it is for its namesake violet sunsets. And if you have a Netflix account, you may recognize it as the breathtaking backdrop of the dark new original series Bloodline. It's not hard to see why Hollywood has taken notice, skipping over more well-known spots like Key Largo to the north and Key West to the south in favor of filming in the Village of Islands, as it's known to residents.

Islamorada is a 90-minute drive from Miami and shares an area code with the Magic City—305, as the songster Pitbull is wont to remind us—but it feels like another world entirely. About seven miles long and at some points no wider than two lanes of road, it's composed of four islands strung together by the Keys' sole artery, the Overseas Highway, plus two more offshore. Set plumb in the middle of the Florida Bay at the mouth of the Gulf Stream, with the Atlantic on one side and the Gulf of Mexico on the other, Islamorada is known today as the "Sportfishing Capital of the World." But you don't have to be an angler to appreciate its laidback allure—there are plenty of opportunities for R&R and great eating to go around.

Drop anchor at Pelican Cove Resort and Marina, located at the center of the village. The newly renovated resort reopened in December with 63 bright and airy guestrooms, each minimally outfitted in blond wood furniture and crisp white linens. After settling in, take in the ocean view from art deco chairs on your room's private balcony, where you can watch pelicans swoop into the water for a snack. If you'd rather be closer to the action, head to the beach and sink into a hammock under the palm trees, or snag one of the resort's complimentary kayaks or paddleboards to seek out the manatees that can be spotted in the nearby mangroves. If you're more of a landlubber, the resort also offers guests free bike rentals for checking out the islands on two wheels.

All that paddling, pedaling and palm tree gazing works up an appetite, so head just down the road to the Key Island Grill for fish tacos, conch fritters and, of course, homemade key lime pie. Grab a seat by the open windows overlooking a waterway where fishing boats glide by on their way back from a morning at sea. Perhaps they're heading to the famous Islamorada Fish Company, whose chef will cook up the daily catch from recreational fishers in addition to the full menu.

After lunch, walk over to the Theater of the Sea and take in a performance. There are several daily dolphin, sea lion and parrot shows, as well as chances to interact with the animals, snorkel, take a ride on a glass-bottomed boat or commission artwork from one of the sea mammals, who'll hold a brush by the mouth to paint a masterpiece as you watch. Late in the afternoon, make your way to the Bass Pro Shops for tarpon-feeding sessions; soon the water under the dock will teem with large fish that practically eat out of your hand. Pop inside to shop for some gear or check out the full-scale replica of Ernest Hemingway's boat, Pilar, which inspired his tome The Old Man and the Sea, written while he was a Keys resident.

In the evening, watch the sun dip below the horizon with some libations in hand. Islamorada is home to two great microbreweries where you can enjoy fresh brewed beer on-site. At Florida Keys Brewing Company, take in local art along with your Honey-Bottomed Blonde, brewed with local honey, or grab a pint of Sandbar Sunday, a wheat ale served with a wedge of key lime, at Islamorada Beer Company. Wind down with live music and a storied—and strong—Rum Runner at the Postcard Inn's renowned Tiki Bar, where outdoor fire pits along the marina are the perfect setting to meet fellow travelers and compare vacation notes. ◆

SELECT FEW

SELECT OYSTER BAR
50 Gloucester St., Boston
(857-239-8064)

CONSIDERING ITS NATIONAL REPUTATION, Boston long managed to dodge an uncomfortable truth: For many years, our seafood restaurants weren't that extraordinary, and we put one over on visitors with gloppy-chowder tourist traps. The city turned a corner 10 years ago with the arrival of Neptune Oyster, which paved the way for a handful of similarly excellent independent seafood restaurants. After a long stint helming Neptune's kitchen, chef Michael Serpa recently struck out on his own, opening Select Oyster Bar in a Back Bay storefront with chef de cuisine Sebastian Martinez. While it's not Neptune Redux, it hits many of the same highs while charting some new waters.

Longtime Serpa fans will be unsurprised by the outstanding raw bar and crudi, including unimpeachable raw oysters ($2.75) drawn from local waters between Maine and Martha's Vineyard, with occasional, uniquely briny West Coast selections like smallish Hog Island oysters from Northern California. These pristine specimens need only the barest squeeze of lemon or squirt of mignonette. A crudo of Virginia striped bass ($17) boasts a subtle embellishment of cara-cara orange, fleur de sel and espelette, while dayboat scallop ceviche ($15) is happily, gently transformed by a marinade of lime, shallots and cilantro. If all you ate at Select was raw or nearly raw seafood, you'd do well indeed.

But Serpa and Martinez offer plenty of inventive cooked dishes, too. Billi-bi "Pierre Franey" ($12) is like an extravagant variant on New England clam chowder, its broth almost overpoweringly rich in cream, melted leeks and egg yolk, but good, plentiful PEI mussels provide just enough ocean-redolent counterweight to give the soup balance. Egg salad ($20) gorgeously surrounds a sunnyside egg with chopped asparagus and fresh favas in a fine smoked-trout dressing, a dollop of ebony sturgeon caviar providing a spiky salt accent. Arroz frito ($18) reads like squid-ink paella with its blackish sofrito, chunks of cuttlefish and roasted cauliflower, and wondrous, creamy crown of uni. Octopus basquaise ($15) features a vibrant sweet-pepper ragout dotted with green olives, golden raisins and potatoes, but truly wows with its fantastic treatment of octopus tentacles, braising them to tenderness and adding some exterior crunch and char on the plancha.

Steamed littleneck clams ($14), two dozen perfect little babies swimming in a gently garlicky sauce of butter, lemon, white wine and parsley, is a glorious, entirely forgivable cliche. Blue prawns a la plancha ($17) are similarly uncomplicated: five meaty giants barely dressed in olive oil and lemon, a messy bit of handwork to peel properly, their deep, sweet flavor a testament to impeccable freshness.

Larger dishes also range from elaborate to judiciously uncomplicated. Casco Bay hake "pil-pil" ($26) rests fillets atop a cushion of celery root puree and prettily adorns it with buttered hazelnuts and a salad of parsley and celery. Bouillabaisse Select ($35) starts with a fabulous foundation of saffron- and tomato-tinged broth based on shrimp-shell/fish-head stock, then generously piles on hake, arctic char, striped bass, mussels, giant prawn, potatoes and a big crouton smeared with pungent rouille. Icelandic arctic char ($26) is a rare misstep, not for its lovely underpinning of beet salad, dill and sorrel, but the fish's uneven cooking, revealed in an unpleasantly underdone center. But the kitchen nails the presumably more-challenging preparation of whole roasted sea bream "taverna style" ($27), well-accompanied by a subtle, simple herb dressing, hearty roasted fennel and fingerling potatoes. Pan-roasted Maine lobster ($35) brings refinement to the tourist grail, splitting a good-sized hen down the middle, making its succulent tail meat and tomalley an easy extraction, with a terrific mound of soft-cooked Vidalia spring onions on top and a simple brown butter/lemon sauce. (You'll need to put down the fork to tackle the half-cracked claws.)

Bar manager Gina Richard oversees a fine cocktail program, presumably sharing management's love for Hemingway by pouring a Death in the Afternoon ($13.50), a deadly highball of Champagne and absinthe, and the Floridita daiquiri ($13.50) of rum, lime, grapefruit, simple syrup and Maraschino liqueur. The dozen-strong list of beers (all $8) leans on small, Northeastern craft brewers. The wine list provides some very thoughtful accompaniment to the seafood, including a sprightly assortment of rosés like the fizzy 2014 Ulacia Txakoli ($15) and the paler, more understated 2014 Domaine du Bagnol Cassis ($18), but prices carry a Back Bay premium.

Some customers may also balk at the automatic 20 percent pre-tax gratuity, though a word with management will "kindly remove it." Service is so polished and warm that I never questioned the charge, but it's an unusual step that risks offending otherwise-happy customers. The space presents a charming adaptation of a former residential townhouse, centered on a large, comfortable bar and completed with a lovely open-air rear patio. Having quickly taken its place among the growing ranks of genuinely excellent seafood restaurants, Select's novel focus on more Mediterranean flavors gives it some useful differentiation. I expect its biggest drawback will be another parallel with Neptune: No reservations means locals and tourists alike will face long waits for its few-dozen seats. As problems go, that's a classy one to have. ◆

Q: HOW DO I GET RID OF THE CELLULITE ON MY THIGHS?

A: Cellulite is caused from enlarged fat cells pushing up against tight connective tissue bands. As we age or gain weight, our fat cells expand and start to push up on these bands creating a dimpled, orange-peel appearance. The most effective treatment we have found to treat stubborn cellulite is RF (Radio Frequency) Body Contouring.

RF treatments deliver energy deep into the dermal layers of your skin, where your cellulite lives. The thermal heat caused by the radio frequency, along with vacuum pressure, results in the release of fatty acids from your fat cells which are then safely and naturally released from your body through your lymphatic system. As an added bonus the treatments also stimulate collagen, elastin and fibroblasts that tighten the skin, and improve circulation. The result is a smoother, tighter, more youthful appearance in the treatment area!

The treatments do not hurt and there is no downtime. Our SkinHealth clients have been thrilled with their results!

MAD TO THE BONE

GEORGE MILLER STEPS ON THE GAS, DRIVING HIS BEST MAD MAX YET.

THIRTY YEARS BEYOND THUNDERDOME, Max Rockatansky returns to cinemas, madder than ever, but more hardened; he's a changed man—and not just because he's now played by rising star Tom Hardy, who steps into the role originated by Mel Gibson in 1979's Mad Max.

Australian filmmaker George Miller introduced audiences to the police officer who patrols a ravaged near future in the "Ozploitation" original, which provided motivation for our hero when his best friend on the force was burned alive by a savage motorcycle gang. When these ruthless outlaws, led by Toecutter (Hugh Keays-Byrne), went on to murder Max's wife and infant son, he had only one thing left to live for: revenge.

Max's vengeance continued in Miller's superior sequel, 1982's The Road Warrior, as the cynical former cop wandered an even more lawless land, finding himself defending an enclave of survivors from much larger and more terrifying gangs after society's collapse. Then Miller took us into post-apocalyptic territory with 1985's Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome, but his heart didn't seem to be in it anymore. Perhaps that explains the presence of a co-director, George Ogilvie. In any case, the film was a disappointment.

That's not the case with this fourth installment, which is a masterpiece of movement. The Road Warrior culminated in a 14-minute chase sequence that found Max behind the wheel as he was pursued on all sides by a band of murderous bandits. In hindsight, this celebrated scene seems to have served as a test run for Mad Max: Fury Road, which the 70-year-old Miller has essentially distilled into a single two-hour chase sequence in conjunction with stunt coordinator Guy Norris. This is pure cinema, and it shames the work of directors half Miller's age.

Forgoing film in favor of digital cameras, Miller has nevertheless retained an analog feel, thanks to his resistance to CGI. Some 80 percent of the movie's stunt work was captured live, in sequence, during several months of shooting in the Namibian desert.

As for that desert, it's unlike anything you've ever seen. Cinematographer John Seale has employed a starkly vivid, saturated color scheme, filled with bright oranges and deep blues—quite unlike the ugly browns and grays that grime up most post-apocalyptic productions.

This is pure cinema, and it shames the work of directors half Miller's age.

Hardy's Max, on the other hand, is a bit less colorful than Gibson's. No longer interested in vengeance, this modern Max is defined by a lone instinct, which Hardy (The Dark Knight Rises' Bane) announces in a voice-over at the movie's outset: "survival." While Gibson managed to crack a tiny smile 91 minutes into The Road Warrior's 95-minute running time, Hardy offers no such relief during this picture's relentless kineticism, with stunt work aided by a propulsive musical score by Junkie XL and tight editing overseen by Margaret Sixel.

And because the film is basically a feature-length chase scene, the script began not as a collection of words, but as a storyboard made up of more than 3,500 drawings, many created by Brendan McCarthy. The comic book artist is credited as a co-writer alongside Miller and Nick Lathouris, an actor who appeared in the original Mad Max as a character named Grease Rat. Unconventional, to be sure, but how better to illustrate the movie's narrative, which focuses on dozens of killer rides hurtling across the swirling sands?

Central among the nearly 150 metallic beasts jury-rigged from automotive scrap by production designer Colin Gibson is the War Rig, a 78-foot 18-wheeler that combines a Czechoslovakian Tatra military off-roader with a 1940s Chevy Fleetmaster. And yes, that rear gun turret is made out of a Volkswagen Beetle. This monster truck is the object of pursuit, and it's driven by Charlize Theron's Imperator Furiosa, the picture's true hero; it's her vengeance that drives Fury Road, and the apathetic Max reluctantly joins her, the better to stay alive.

After all, Max is nearly killed during the film's opening moments, when he's captured by the "War Boys," the cancer-stricken muscle for brutal warlord Immortan Joe (the returning Keays-Byrne, playing a more vile villain than Toecutter). Max becomes a "blood bag" for Nux (Nicholas Hoult), a War Boy who requires transfusions to live.

After Max's capture, Furiosa, one of Joe's most-trusted lieutenants, sets off on a supply run in her rig. But secretly, she's stolen away with his most valued "property"—his five wives (Rosie Huntington-Whiteley, Zoë Kravitz, Riley Keough, Abbey Lee and Courtney Eaton)—whom she's liberated.

Angered by her duplicity, the Immortan sends a small army of War Boys after Furiosa. Among them is Nux, who gives chase in his 1932 canted-wheeled Deuce Coupe with weaponized exhaust pipes. Chained to the front—crucifixion-style—is Max, who's still hanging tough as Nux's human IV bag.

Vehicular mayhem ensues as Max escapes his captor, teaming up with Furiosa, his fate now bound to her. As the armies of two more neighboring warlords converge on our heroes, the earlier films' battles for oil and gas are replaced by a fight for something more precious: human life. ◆

REVIVAL MEETING

BROOKLYN-BASED SOUTHERNERS FORGE HARMONY FROM FAMILY DYNAMICS.

BOSTON HOLDS SPECIAL SIGNIFICANCE FOR the Lone Bellow, the Americana-steeped rockers who first played the city the night after the lockdown in the manhunt for the Marathon bomber. "There was this cathartic feeling in the room," primary singer/songwriter Zach Williams recalls of their 2013 show at Brighton Music Hall, "like 'We have this incredible opportunity to be part of a bit of humanity.'"

That feeling plays a major role in the grandly earnest music of the Lone Bellow, which graces both Boston Calling on May 24 and the Newport Folk Festival on July 24. "We use this term Southern Gothic a lot for our music," Williams says. "At the core, we're a three-part harmony band that uses whatever instrumentation we feel the song calls for."

The songs on the group's January release, Then Came the Morning, range from the sweeping piano-based title track to the electric boogie "Heaven Don't Call Me Home," and from the churning anthem "Take My Love" to the soft gospel-folk ballad "I Let You Go." Relationships with friends and family fuel lyrics in songs like "Marietta," which riffs on secrets Williams faced in his marriage.

"The songs ebb and flow out of tragedy and hope and betrayal and redemption," Williams, 34, says from the road in Missouri. "There are times in the show where songs that we've written are really hard to sing every night, and there are other songs in the show that just celebrate being alive."

The fervent singer/guitarist secured soulmates in guitar buddy Brian Elmquist, a fellow Georgia native he met at a Virginia college, and mandolinist Kanene Pipkin, whose older brother was a friend when Williams most needed support.

In 2005, Williams' wife broke her neck in a fall from a horse, leading to bedside hours at an Atlanta hospital where she lay paralyzed. His journal writings turned into songs that Elmquist encouraged him to perform at open mics. And when his wife "miraculously healed," Williams kept a vow with several friends who lived through the ordeal to move together to Brooklyn.

Elmquist joined them a few years later, after time in Nashville, and he and Williams led separate bands. "I was going through some relationship drama and wrote all these really sad songs and stopped by the diner that Brian worked at and said, 'Do you want to get together and just play music?'" Williams says. He also invited Pipkin, who'd just arrived in town with her husband after five years in China. She and Elmquist both had experience singing in a cappella groups.

"There was this cathartic feeling in the room... like 'We have this incredible opportunity to be part of a bit of humanity.'"

"With the song 'You Can Be All Kinds of Emotional,' we hit the bridge for the first time, and we were all able to sing full throttle and not worry about each other," Williams says. "It was just this moment where all three of us were [thinking] 'Let's do this.'"

They named the band after a bull that Williams heard one night when he was a child staying in his grandmother's guest room. "I was really scared and heard this noise in the cow pasture," he says. "A quarter of a mile away, I see this white thing in the tree and thought it was a ghost." In the daylight, it turned out to be a plastic bag.

For Then Came the Morning, the Lone Bellow didn't go far to find Brooklyn neighbor Aaron Dessner, guitarist for the National (and curator of Boston Calling), who agreed to produce the group's second album. They decamped to Woodstock to record at Dreamland, a reopened studio in a rundown church.

"The sanctuary was the main room where we did the vocals, and we all stood around each other, so the vocal blends are natural," Williams says, adding that Dessner and engineer Jonathan Low "put these mics up in the ceiling to get the ambient sounds of what it sounds like to sing in an old church."

Now the songs resonate through listeners' personal interpretations, shared with Williams on the road. "That's a weighty thing for me," he says. "If people have allowed these lyrics and melodies into their drives to work or whatever, I want to do my very best." ◆

WHAT A TRIP

TAKING A SUMMER VACATION IS ACTUALLY A LOT OF WORK.

IT'S MAY, WHICH MEANS IT'S TIME TO PLAN YOUR summer vacation. What, you haven't yet planned this year's trip? No big deal: There are plenty of great last-minute trips you could take, like a weekend at the Fitchburg Bee Sting Festival or Olde Paper Mill Days in Rumford, Maine. Want to be spontaneous? Double-park your car and hide in the back seat while it's towed away. Where will you end up? It's anybody's guess! But it'll be the Frontage Road tow lot.

If you're looking for a wild vacation, head due south to Rhode Island (State Motto: Every Week Is Bike Week). Rhode Island actually has no rules, as is reflected by its very name, which is complete nonsense. It would've been equally appropriate to name it Rhode Flying Volcano, which they briefly did during an LSD-fueled legislative session in 1971. Remember that in Rhode Island, you're not allowed to commit murder unless you have a low license plate number.

To our north, New Hampshire has five and a half feet of lovely Atlantic coastline, right between the submarine base and the nuclear power plant. New Hampshire is so hard up for waterfront that in 2001 it went to the Supreme Court to try to claim an island in the Piscataqua River from Maine. The Supreme Court ruled in Maine's favor, adding, "You two should just get it over with and hook up already. The sexual tension is unbearable."

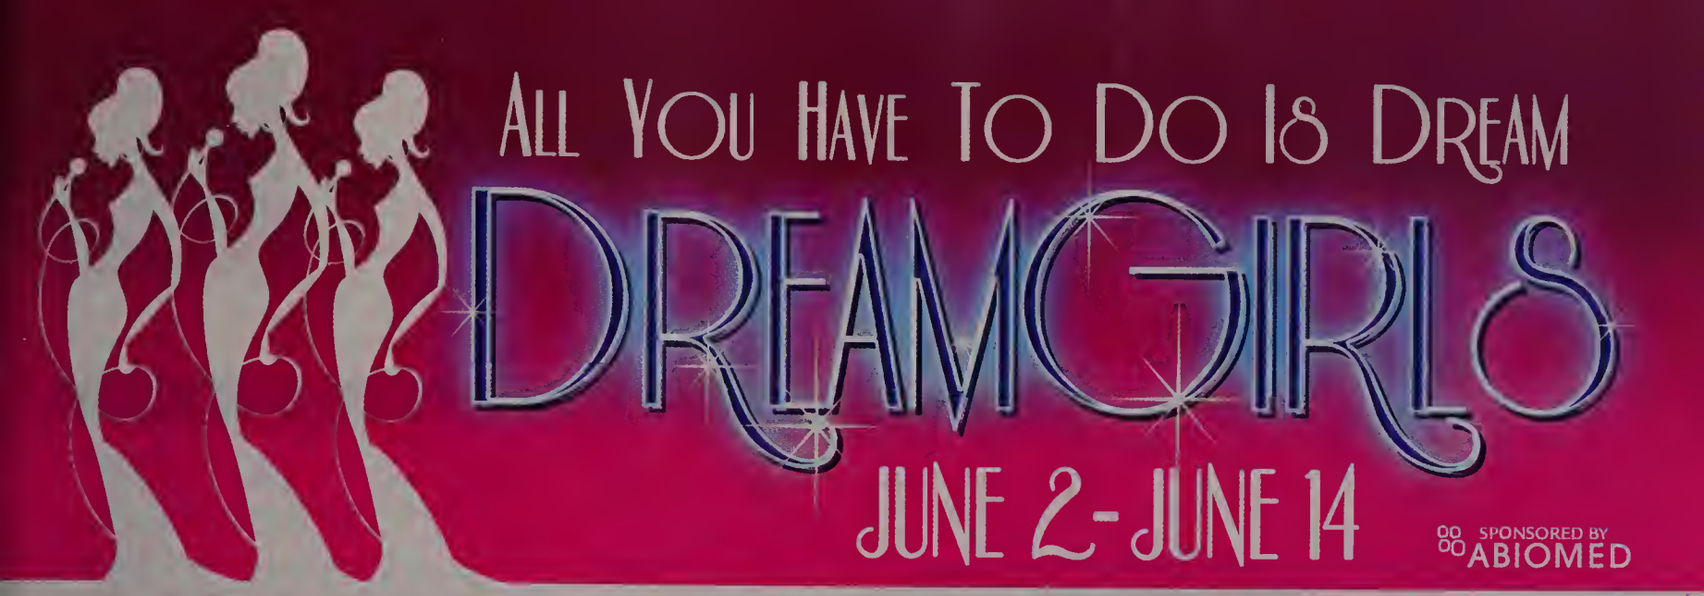
Here in Massachusetts, our most popular destination is Cape Cod, a spit of sand shaped like a meathead flexing. The Cape is fun if you've always wished you could vacation inside your dishwasher. Actually, that's not exactly accurate, because the inside of your dishwasher is probably warm. Every time I've been to the Cape in the past five years, it's rained. Last year I went to the Beachcomber, and the outdoor waiting area was like a muddy wading pool. The ocean, just beyond the dunes, was only slightly wetter than the air. Sharks and lobsters were attacking people in the parking lot. Maybe I'm misremembering that. To be honest, the view wasn't great through my car's periscope.

Now that you know where you're going to go, let's talk timing. Vacation houses rent Saturday to Saturday, for maximum inconvenience. Is it Friday? Well, you can't start your vacation yet. Is it Sunday? Sure, you've got the day off, but your vacation ended yesterday. Maybe you should just go to work. Or you could drive back to the house and look in the windows at the people who are there now. Hey, you've got time!

To get around the weekly house rentals, you can stay at a hotel like the Chatham Bars Inn. On the downside, a room there will cost 16 times as much as a house. Not a house rental: a house. The Chatham Bars Inn is where I once lost a game of credit-card roulette for a round of drinks, a turn of fate that caused me to flee to Thailand for radical cosmetic surgery and a new identity. As far as Visa is concerned, I'm now a Canadian national named Jesper Lumberman—you might know me as "Jesper the Plumber with Bad News" on HGTV. Homeowners hate it when I show up, but they always grudgingly follow my recommendations because they respect my expertise and encyclopedic knowledge of the Toronto sewer system.

When your vacation's over, I recommend you keep the party going with a Sunday day trip. On the North Shore, you can take the commuter rail to the beach in Manchester-by-the-Sea. Be forewarned that local ordinance permits residents three sneers per day to be directed toward day-trippers disembarking from the train. Alternatively, save yourself some travel time and just go to Revere, where you can eat roast beef sandwiches and raise your voice.

On the South Shore, Route 3A will lead you to Hingham and Hull. If you want a quick day trip, Hull is way more fun than Hingham. For instance, Hull has the Sea Dog Brew Pub. Hingham has houses where people can't put in new windows because the old ones date to 1813 and were installed by Paul Revere's cousin's farrier, who died of dysentery on the front steps, which are now a historic site and may not be altered even though they've been made of mold and wasps since late '73, by which I mean 1873.



I know this was a lot of great advice to digest and you're thinking it over while sitting on the stool at the breakfast bar, drinking coffee and wearing a yellow shirt. I mean, maybe you are? Chill out. Yeah, my vacation ended yesterday, and yeah, I'm still on the property. With my fireworks and Jarts. You know what they say: If you can't deal with a little loitering, you don't vacation in the Flying Volcano. ◆

The Cape is fun if you've always wished you could vacation inside your dishwasher.

SOUND ADVICE ON VEGGIE LOVERS AND BUILDING A NEST EGG

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is the Boston Globe number-one best-seller No One Ever Told Us That, a collection of letters with life lessons for his grandchildren. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I am a vegetarian and I have yet to come across a man I like who is not omnivorous. I don't like the idea of having a partner who eats meat because animal rights are something I feel strongly about. Should I just get over it or hold out for someone who shares my lifestyle? Relationships are more challenged than ever in America, and any new romance is probably doomed if you cannot happily eat together. I advise you to avoid the cavemen and search for the greener editions. I do know a billionaire who became a happy vegan in the last few years. However, he lives in New York. But these days it seems that there's an app for everything, and certainly the social networks can supply you with vegetarian men of every flavor.

But know the downside: You're removing a big part of the male population from your search for happiness.

I'm trying to save money, but in the process I feel as though my social life is severely suffering. It seems like the only fun things to do—restaurants, shopping, museums and art galleries—cost money. There are only so many home movie nights one can entertain oneself with before going stir crazy. How can I strike a balance between saving and spending? You're not alone. Since the Great Recession started in 2007-08, millions of Americans have found it difficult, if not impossible, to save money. And all the expenses that require monthly payments—rent, insurance, cable, phones—seem to endlessly increase, not shrink. You mentioned some favorite pleasures of life that are expensive—shopping is the most discretionary item, an indulgence that may be modest for one person, out of control for another.

Oscar Wilde once said, "I can resist everything except temptation." So, I believe that the best way for people to avoid temptation is to be forced to save. My first boss was a mentor to me, wise in the ways of the world and a student of history. "I'm going to do you a favor," he told me. "I'm going to take 10 percent of your monthly pay and put it into an account in your name that you cannot touch until you buy your first house or apartment. If you work for me, you're going to learn self-discipline." Can you imagine that happening today? Yet five years later I had accumulated enough to put a down payment on my first house.

LETTUCE BE FRIENDS: It's not always easy dating green.

I don't know your personal story, but it sounds like some discipline is needed. This is easy if you have a 401(k) plan as part of your company benefits. Just pick a percentage of your pay to put into the plan—I suggest putting it into whatever long-term-growth mutual fund they offer. There will be penalties for early withdrawal, so it forces you to be good to yourself in the long-term planning department.

As for cheap entertainment? There are all kinds of delicious cheap wines out there. Pasta with salad won't break the bank. And lovemaking costs almost nothing, unless marriage enters the room.

One of my family members works in an industry I'm trying to transition into, but in a different facet of it than the one I'm interested in. He's always suggesting jobs that sound interesting, but it's just not the kind of work I'd like to do. How can I let him know that I'm not interested while still conveying that I sincerely appreciate his efforts? I don't want to seem ungrateful, but I also don't want to be pushed into something I don't want to do. Look back at something you were pushed into, and you'll say, "I knew this wouldn't work. Why did I do it?" But I hope you're being honest with yourself and not just putting off the inevitable—which is working at something. The simple solution is to thank the person for his kindness to you, but say that within that industry you'd really like to focus on a specific area, like IT or marketing. When you're looking for a job, don't be gentle or wishy-washy. Say "I really want to be in sales." Then you're making your point in being specific.

When people are trying to help you, don't beat around the bush—or they will sooner, not later, lose interest in your hunt for employment.

A former co-worker of mine is opening a restaurant and invested nearly all of his money into the new business. My co-workers and I think it's a huge mistake, because he's really young and dropped out of school to do this, but it's his dream so no one will tell him he shouldn't take the risk. Should I speak up or just hope for the best for him? If we have a dream and it involves risk, people try to discourage us, in part because they don't dare to jump off the cliff themselves. But failure teaches us more useful lessons than success, particularly when failure takes place early in our adult lives. So you shouldn't discourage your friend in his new venture. But my sense of the restaurant business is that he most likely will lose his money. And the best next step for him would be to finish college. Most of us are not dropouts like Bill Gates or Mark Zuckerberg, who didn't need school. The diploma will be a good thing for your friend. ◆

Soroff On / Katrina Scott

BODY WORK

THE FITNESS STAR GIVES US THE SKINNY ON STAYING IN SHAPE, FLIRTING AT THE GYM AND JANE FONDA.

FITNESS GURU AND REALITY TV STAR KATRINA SCOTT was born and raised in New Hampshire and earned her bachelor's degree in Health Science at Keene State. She became an elite personal trainer in Boston and produced her own fitness and cooking videos before moving to California. There, while working at Equinox, she met her business partner, Karena Dawn, with whom she developed the wildly popular fitness website ToneItUp.com and starred in the Bravo series Toned Up. This month, they released their first book, Tone It Up: 28 Days to Fit, Fierce, and Fabulous. She lives with her husband, Brian, in Manhattan Beach.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Do you consider yourself a perfect 10?
KATRINA SCOTT: [Laughs] Absolutely not. No. I think the beauty of Tone It Up, and the reason it's been so successful, is that Karena and I aren't perfect. We never really talk about ourselves or our bodies. We talk about other people's bodies and say, "Come work out those gorgeous legs." We don't put anyone down, and I think people know we're not stick figures or size zeros. People can relate to us, and we're like their girlfriends they work out with.

Guilty pleasure? Definitely dark chocolate, rosé or a nice malbec.

Favorite workout? I love kettle bells and HIIT—high-intensity interval training. I do love doing yoga, too, especially because I can't bring my phone in with me. That's the only time I can really step away from work, and it makes me feel more centered.

Least favorite workout? I hate burpees, but I do them, and I make other people do them. But I say beforehand, "I hate them too, but the results are everything, so let's do them together."

Pet peeve at the gym? My first job out of college was at Boston Sports Club, and to this day, I really don't like when people don't wipe off a machine after they've used it.

Do you think people overestimate the amount of time they need to spend at the gym to see results? I think some people think they have to work out for several hours a day to see results, but with HIIT it's really only 20 or 30 minutes. Then you can do some of our toning exercises. Nutrition is also key. You can kill it in the gym, but if you go home and eat crap, your body isn't going to respond to the workout.

When was the last time you ate a cheeseburger or a donut? I had a donut last weekend at one of my favorite restaurants where they served honey-glazed donuts, chocolate éclair donuts and everything. We all split it. So I do have my cake.

What are your thoughts on flirting at the gym? I think it's fine, because people who are trying to date and be healthy spend their evening at the gym instead of, say, at a bar. Where would you rather meet the person you're going to share your life with? If you're single, I think the gym is the perfect spot to look for someone. If you meet at a bar, you might end up marrying someone who never leaves the bar.

"When we go places, people don't approach us like we're celebrities. They approach us like we're their best friends."

What would happen if your husband got fat? Oh my God, he has. And I said, "Honey, you've gotta start working out." He refused to do our workout and instead did Insanity by Beachbody. Now Brian's all excited, because we're doing a workout on the beach with Shaun T., the guy who developed it. I'm like, "You're more excited about meeting Shaun T. than about the fact that we're teaching a workout with Shape Magazine," and he's like, "Yup. So what?"

So the widely publicized proposal: Was that 100 percent real? If you've seen the video, it happened at my parents' lake house at Winnipesaukee. Most girls have an inkling about when a guy is going to propose. I had no idea. I had chipped teal nail polish, which is so embarrassing. It was raining. And Brian proposed while my brother filmed it. Then he jumped into the lake and came up with the ring.

Is your celebrity a surprise or something that you consciously worked toward? I don't see myself as a celebrity. Every day I do feel humbled and blessed, but when we go places, people don't approach us like we're celebrities. They approach us like we're their best friends. We have half a million women on our program and maybe 5 million visiting our site. And everywhere we go, people will come up and give us hugs and tell us all about their progress, and they talk to us as if they know us. I don't think people feel that way about Jennifer Aniston.

So you're not trying to become Jillian Michaels. No. I really like her, though. She puts on a tough act, but she's really sweet.

You worked with Jane Fonda on her Prime Time DVDs. Is her shit still that tight? She's amazing! When she walks into the room, she lights it up she's so beautiful. She has fantastic energy. She's brilliant. She's definitely taken care of herself.

What are three keys to becoming super fit? Obviously, working out. Being active every day. I don't really take a day off. If I don't go to the gym, I might go for a run or a hike, or to yoga, or even a long walk. So making physical activity a part of your day, every day. If you take three days a week off, that's almost half your month. Number two would be nutrition. Making sure you exercise portion control, and everything in moderation, and eating healthy and clean. Being realistic about it, too. Thinking about the week—birthdays, holidays, everything—and setting yourself up for success instead of making a last-minute decision at a bachelorette party or whatever. And finally, accountability. I believe in finding someone who will support you in your goals—a best friend or someone to hold you accountable. Someone to push you.

So can anybody, regardless of age or physical limitations, transform themselves through exercise? Yeah. There's no limit to potential. I was pretty heavy until the age of 12. I was actually considered obese. My mom lost 60 pounds at 60 years old and has maintained it. I don't think there's any limit to health or fitness. ◆

Fresh Art and Fresh Air

Three must-see exhibits that start in the gallery and end in the sunshine.

Start Inside...

At the Boston Athenæum, where Lafayette: An American Icon opens on June 17. A look at the life of the French military genius who fought for the American revolutionaries' cause, it showcases paintings, engravings, manuscripts, maps and sculptures, including a "staggeringly elegant" bust by Jean-Antoine Houdon that once belonged to Thomas Jefferson. "It shows Lafayette at his most dashing," says Athenaeum director Elizabeth Barker. "You can tell why he was a rock-star celebrity, internationally famous by the time he was 20." The Athenæum will also host a lecture from Lafayette biographer Laura Auricchio, a soiree with 18th-century-style hors d'oeuvres from chef and A Taste of History host Walter Staib and a concert of music from the marquis' day. "It's poignant for us because the Boston Athenæum holds most of George Washington's personal library, and Washington thought of Lafayette as a son," Barker says. "We like to imagine that this is the kind of music they would have heard when they were sitting together on the porch at Mount Vernon."

Then head outside...

And take in the harbor breeze at Rowes Wharf, where you can meet Hermione, an exact replica of the ship that brought Lafayette to Boston 235 years ago, which will visit Boston on July 11-12 after a monthlong trans-Atlantic crossing.

Start Inside...

At the deCordova Museum in Lincoln, where the just-opened exhibit Walking Sculpture 1967-2015 is on view through Sept. 13. Taking its title from Michelangelo Pistoletto's seminal 1967 performance—in which he rolled a giant ball of newspaper through the streets of Turin—the show features sculptures, video, photos and performances from 19 artists who prove that our most basic form of locomotion can be anything but pedestrian.

Then head outside... To the deCordova's Sculpture Park, where you can stretch your legs on one of the walks being organized in concert with the exhibit, including a nature walk with the Lincoln Garden Club's botanical experts (July 11), a stilt- or tightrope-walking lesson from Simply Circus (Aug. 8), a literary walk with poet Cole Swensen featuring readings from favorite flaneurs (Aug. 26) and a night walk with artists Erin Shirreff and Frank Heath, who'll supply a unique soundtrack—you just need to bring a flashlight (Sept. 26).

Start inside... At the BSA Space, which is showcasing the past work of the four winning firms of the 2015 Design Biennial Boston from June 25 through Sept. 15, among them Dan Adams and Marie Law Adams of Landing Studio, who transformed an industrial oil tank facility in Chelsea into a public park.

Then head outside...

To the nearby Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy Greenway, where the four Biennial winners will create new installations on view from late June through mid-September. While you're checking those out, you won't be able to miss Brookline-based artist Janet Echelman's recently installed aerial sculpture As If It Were Already Here, featuring more than 100 miles of rope and 542,500 knots.

Party Time

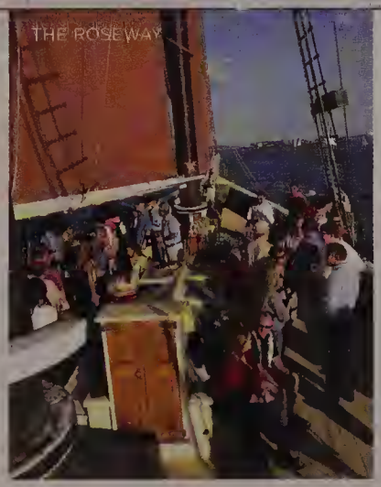
SOUND GARDENS

Those unwilling to shell out the big bucks for Boston Calling can still party downtown, cold beer in hand, to the tunes of local bands-to-know like Nemes, Tigerman WOAH and Dirty Bangs this summer—for free. Yes, Boston Calling Block Parties are back and expanding to two locations (Dewey Square Park and Downtown Crossing's Summer Street Plaza) for weekly and monthly ragers, respectively, through Sept. 17. Meanwhile, over on the waterfront, Boston Calling is teaming up with the Institute of Contemporary Art to present Wavelengths, an outdoor concert series bringing big names like Martha Wainwright, How to Dress Well, Lucius and Mykki Blanco to the harborside spot on Fridays from July 10 through Aug. 28.

CHEERS TO BEERS

We guzzled a lot of red wine to stay warm (and sane) during #Snowpocalypse2015. So this summer we're all about beer—specifically locally brewed craft beers, which will be flowing freely at a number of fests across town.

SUSTAINABLE BUSINESS NETWORK'S FOURTH ANNUAL HYPER-LOCAL CRAFT BREWFEST
This celebration of all things local—from breweries to home brewers and cider and mead makers—pours brews from Baxter, Notch, Peak Organic and more at the Armory in Somerville on June 12-13.



BOSTON BEER & BBQ FEST
Also at the Armory, this fest proves the only thing better than good beer is good beer with good 'cue. Expect plenty of both on June 19-20 at Drink Craft Beer's event, featuring New England suds and barbecue from joints like East Coast Grill.

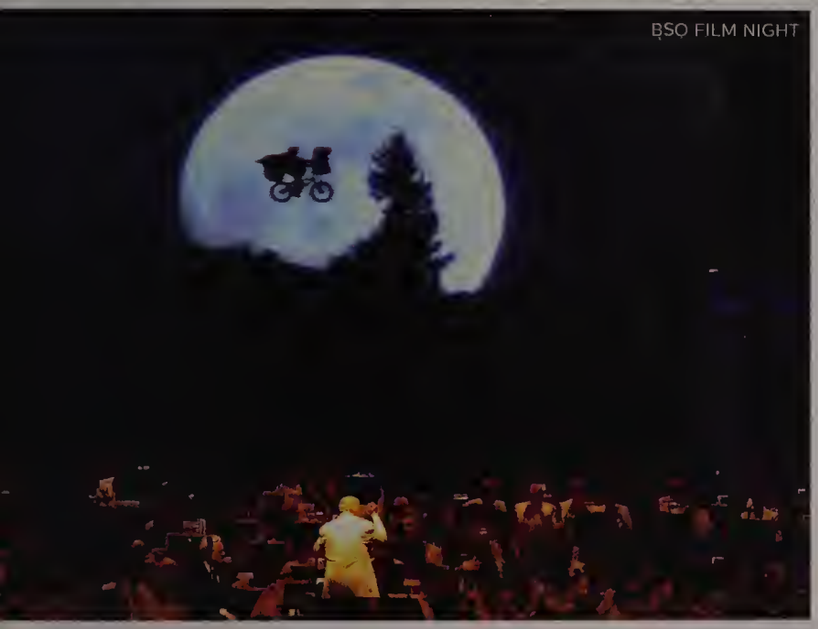
WGBH'S THIRD ANNUAL CRAFT BEER FEST
Taste dozens of local brews along with eats from popular food trucks, plus get schooled on some brewing know-how, al fresco in WGBH Studios' visitor parking lot on July 11.

ARTY AFFAIRS

Oh, so you fancy, huh? Then bust out the tux or gown for your choice of two back-to-back museum bashes. First up on June 3 is The Gardner Remixed: A Summer Soiree, featuring a performance by buzzy Brooklyn violin-viola duo Chargaux, sweet treats, light bites and cocktailing. Dress to impress because the Gardner Museum itself will be sporting bling: Fenway Deity, Ken Smith's new inflatable installation that's adorning the building's facade with a gold chain and psychedelic pendant. Then on June 6 comes the Museum of Fine Arts' Summer Party, a lavish affair in the museum's courtyard replete with music, dancing, light fare and dessert, a juried silent art auction and, of course, a full bar. Attire is black tie with a touch of blue, a nod to the Hokusai exhibit on view through Aug. 9.

BOOZE ON A BOAT

Is that a sailboat or a schooner? Who cares—either way, we're drinking on it! World Ocean School presents two opportunities to get sauced at sea this summer: Wine Down Wednesdays and Beer Tasting Thursdays aboard the historic Roseway sailboat. The sails occur once a month, kicking off June 4 (beer, with Mayflower Brewing Co.) and June 17 (wine).



Rather sip on something a bit harder? Whisky Guild's Boston Whisky Cruise on June 11 features a variety of whiskey tastings and a buffet dinner—pony up for a VIP ticket to score some rare pours while aboard.

Worried about seasickness? You're going to be way too busy to be queasy at BSSC's June 19 Rock the Boat party cruise, which features a live band, a DJ, cornhole and other games, temporary tattoos, snacks and three decks with their own cash bars aboard the Provincetown II.

Want to get three sheets to the wind without leaving port? Make like Captain Jack Sparrow during Crawl in Boston's Pirate Pub Crawl on June 6. You can dress the part while marauding (but please, no pillaging) through participating downtown bars. (Heads up, landlubbers: One stop includes boarding an actual boat.)

A YEAR IN CHAMPAGNE

BSO FILM NIGHT

Screen Scenes

FANTASTIC FOUR

1 The Coolidge Corner Theatre and Wine Enthusiast magazine are teaming up to bring four vino-centric vignettes to the screen. The Wine and Film program kicks off on May 21 with Somm, a doc following four wine stewards as they prepare for the Master Sommelier Exam, which only 220 people have passed in the past 40 years. Then on June 4, you can let importer Martine Saunier guide you through Gosset, Bollinger and other sparkling wine houses in A Year in Champagne. Each $15 movie ticket scores you post-screening tastings of Alta Luna, Ferrari and Cinzano with experts. Cheers to that.

2 John Williams is missing his scheduled May 22-23 BSO Film Night performances, so violinist Richard Kaufman will lead the Pops as they bring the celebrated conductor's scores for films like E.T., Jaws and Star Wars to life at Symphony Hall. But Williams will lead an outdoor version of the concert on Aug. 22 at Tanglewood, where he'll be joined by composer David Newman.

3 Beginning June 28, Museum of Science visitors have infinity and beyond—OK, 10,000 square feet—to explore The Science Behind Pixar, an eight-part exhibit featuring the artists and computer scientists behind animated hits like Toy Story and Monsters, Inc. Learn how the Finding Nemo crew created virtual light in the movie's animated ocean and discover the camera angle tricks that give viewers an insect's point of view in A Bug's Life.

4 Enter another dimension in late August when MediaMation installs the first full 4D Motion EFX theater on the East Coast. Showcase Cinema de Lux Revere's 70 seats will move, blast air and water, tickle legs and dispense fog scents, among other sensory-heightening additions.

LYMAN ESTATE

AL FRESCO FILMGOING

Enough with the Netflix binge-watching already—get your flick fix at one of these outdoor movie screenings.

- Waltham's Lyman Estate hosts screenings of Night at the Museum, The Philadelphia Story and more on Thursday nights in July. Moviegoers can picnic on the grounds or tour the first floor of the 1793 building before the reel rolls.
- The action at the Hatch Shell doesn't end with the July 4 concert. WBZ Free Friday Flicks begin a week later and run through the end of August, accompanied by games, giveaways and food samples.
- Rowes Wharf transforms into a waterfront cinema with Boston Harbor Hotel's Summer in the City Entertainment Series. Don't miss Kramer vs. Kramer, Groundhog Day, Big and more at Movies by Moonlight Fridays, running June 12-Sept. 4.
- In the midst of its 75 stores and eateries, you'll find the Shops at Prudential Center's South Garden. On Saturdays from July 11 through Aug. 29, drop by the 1.3-acre urban oasis for Up, Ratatouille and other kid-friendly flicks.
- Head to the park after dark for Mayor Walsh's Movie Nights on weeknights throughout August. Catch Miracle in Charlestown's Eden Street Park on Aug. 13 and Despicable Me 2 in Dorchester's Town Field two weeks later.

INDOOR FUN

WEEKEND WARRIOR

As any Saturday-afternoon IKEA shopper can attest, Sweden has a knack for testing the limits of human endurance. But its latest export entails quests more exciting than end table assembly—like breaking out of Alcatraz, making it through a haunted house or surviving a pirate's life at sea. Making its U.S. debut in early August, live-action gaming adventure Boda Borg will open just off the Orange Line's Malden Center stop in a former department store, where groups of three to five will be faced with puzzles to solve, walls to climb and tunnels to navigate. "It's like living inside a video game, only you're the main character and there's nothing virtual about it," says owner and Harvard Business School alum Chad Ellis, who adds that the challenge is part of the fun—so don't expect the staff to save the day if you're stumped. "When you finish a quest, you feel exhilarated about it in a way you wouldn't if everyone was going to finish it." He should know: He's currently strength training in the hope of beating two of the more physical quests that have bested him.

Boda Borg will offer 18 quests to start, and Ellis plans to expand to 25 and change several each year, so returning guests of all ages—paying $18 for two hours or $28 for the day—can always expect new challenges. Also in the works are a 150-seat restaurant with a taco buffet and private rooms for birthdays, corporate events, and bachelor and bachelorette parties. And within the next few years, Ellis has his sights set on a roof deck with views of the Boston skyline.

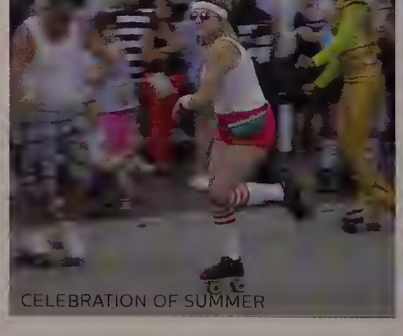
BODA BORG

OUTDOOR FUN

GRASS ROOTS

Throwback to childhood with some outdoor playtime this summer, whether it's with traditional backyard games a ferry ride away on Georges Island or on solar-powered swings in South Boston's collective backyard, The Lawn on D, entering its second summer season. In addition to its regular selection of pingpong, cornhole and bocce, The Lawn on D will add an inflatable maze and host Boston Children's Museum on July 18 for a PlayDay featuring Tangle, an interactive web of ribbons that encourages adults to get as wrapped up in the fun as the kids.

THOSE SUMMER NIGHTS



Hey, Hot Stuff, show off your boogie grooves at the free Celebration of Summer roller disco party at City Hall Plaza on June 19 at 6 pm. Honoring Boston's own Donna Summer, the sunset skate features tunes from DJ Kon and reps from Dance Spot Boston, Jacques' Cabaret and the Boston Derby Dames.

AS SEEN ON TV

Suit up in the house that Tom built for a gridiron challenge of your own when Gillette Stadium transforms into the Wipeout Run 5K obstacle course on Aug. 1. Complete with monkey bars, foam slides and the largest inflatable water slide in the world, it's worth the Zipcar rental—if only to see your friends bounce face-first off the Big Balls.

THE LAWN ON D

WIPEOUT RUN

Summertime Stages

Curtain calls by major talents.

20/20 VISION

It's fitting that the 20th anniversary of Shakespeare on the Common will feature Will Lyman in the titular role of King Lear. The veteran stage actor has previously taken part in four other Commonwealth Shakespeare Company performances on the Common. And it was his role as Prospero, along with Tony nominee Scott Bradley's set designs for The Tempest in 2000, that helped give Shakespeare on the Common momentum, according to CSC founding artistic director Steven Maler. The next year's production of Twelfth Night featured a stacked ensemble, and soon Maler and his crew became a summer mainstay. "You literally see people out there year after year," Maler says. "You've created a body of work that people are looking at, referencing. And people who started coming are now bringing their kids."

With a young acting program and a theater residency at Babson College, CSC has grown quite a bit—enough that Maler was willing to tackle King Lear, a play he deems daunting but nonetheless irresistible. "The bulk of the success of most plays depends on the casting of four or five people. With Lear, you have eight to 12 people who have to be excellent," he says. "There's an enormous moment where the success or failure of this civilization is at stake. And yet it all boils down to people and to humanity and to bad decisions and to rivalries and to loyalty and disloyalty. It's all these very human experiences.... Tackling that is more than a summer project, I guess."

BOSOMA. TONY MISTRETTA. NEWSIES. DEEN VAN MEER

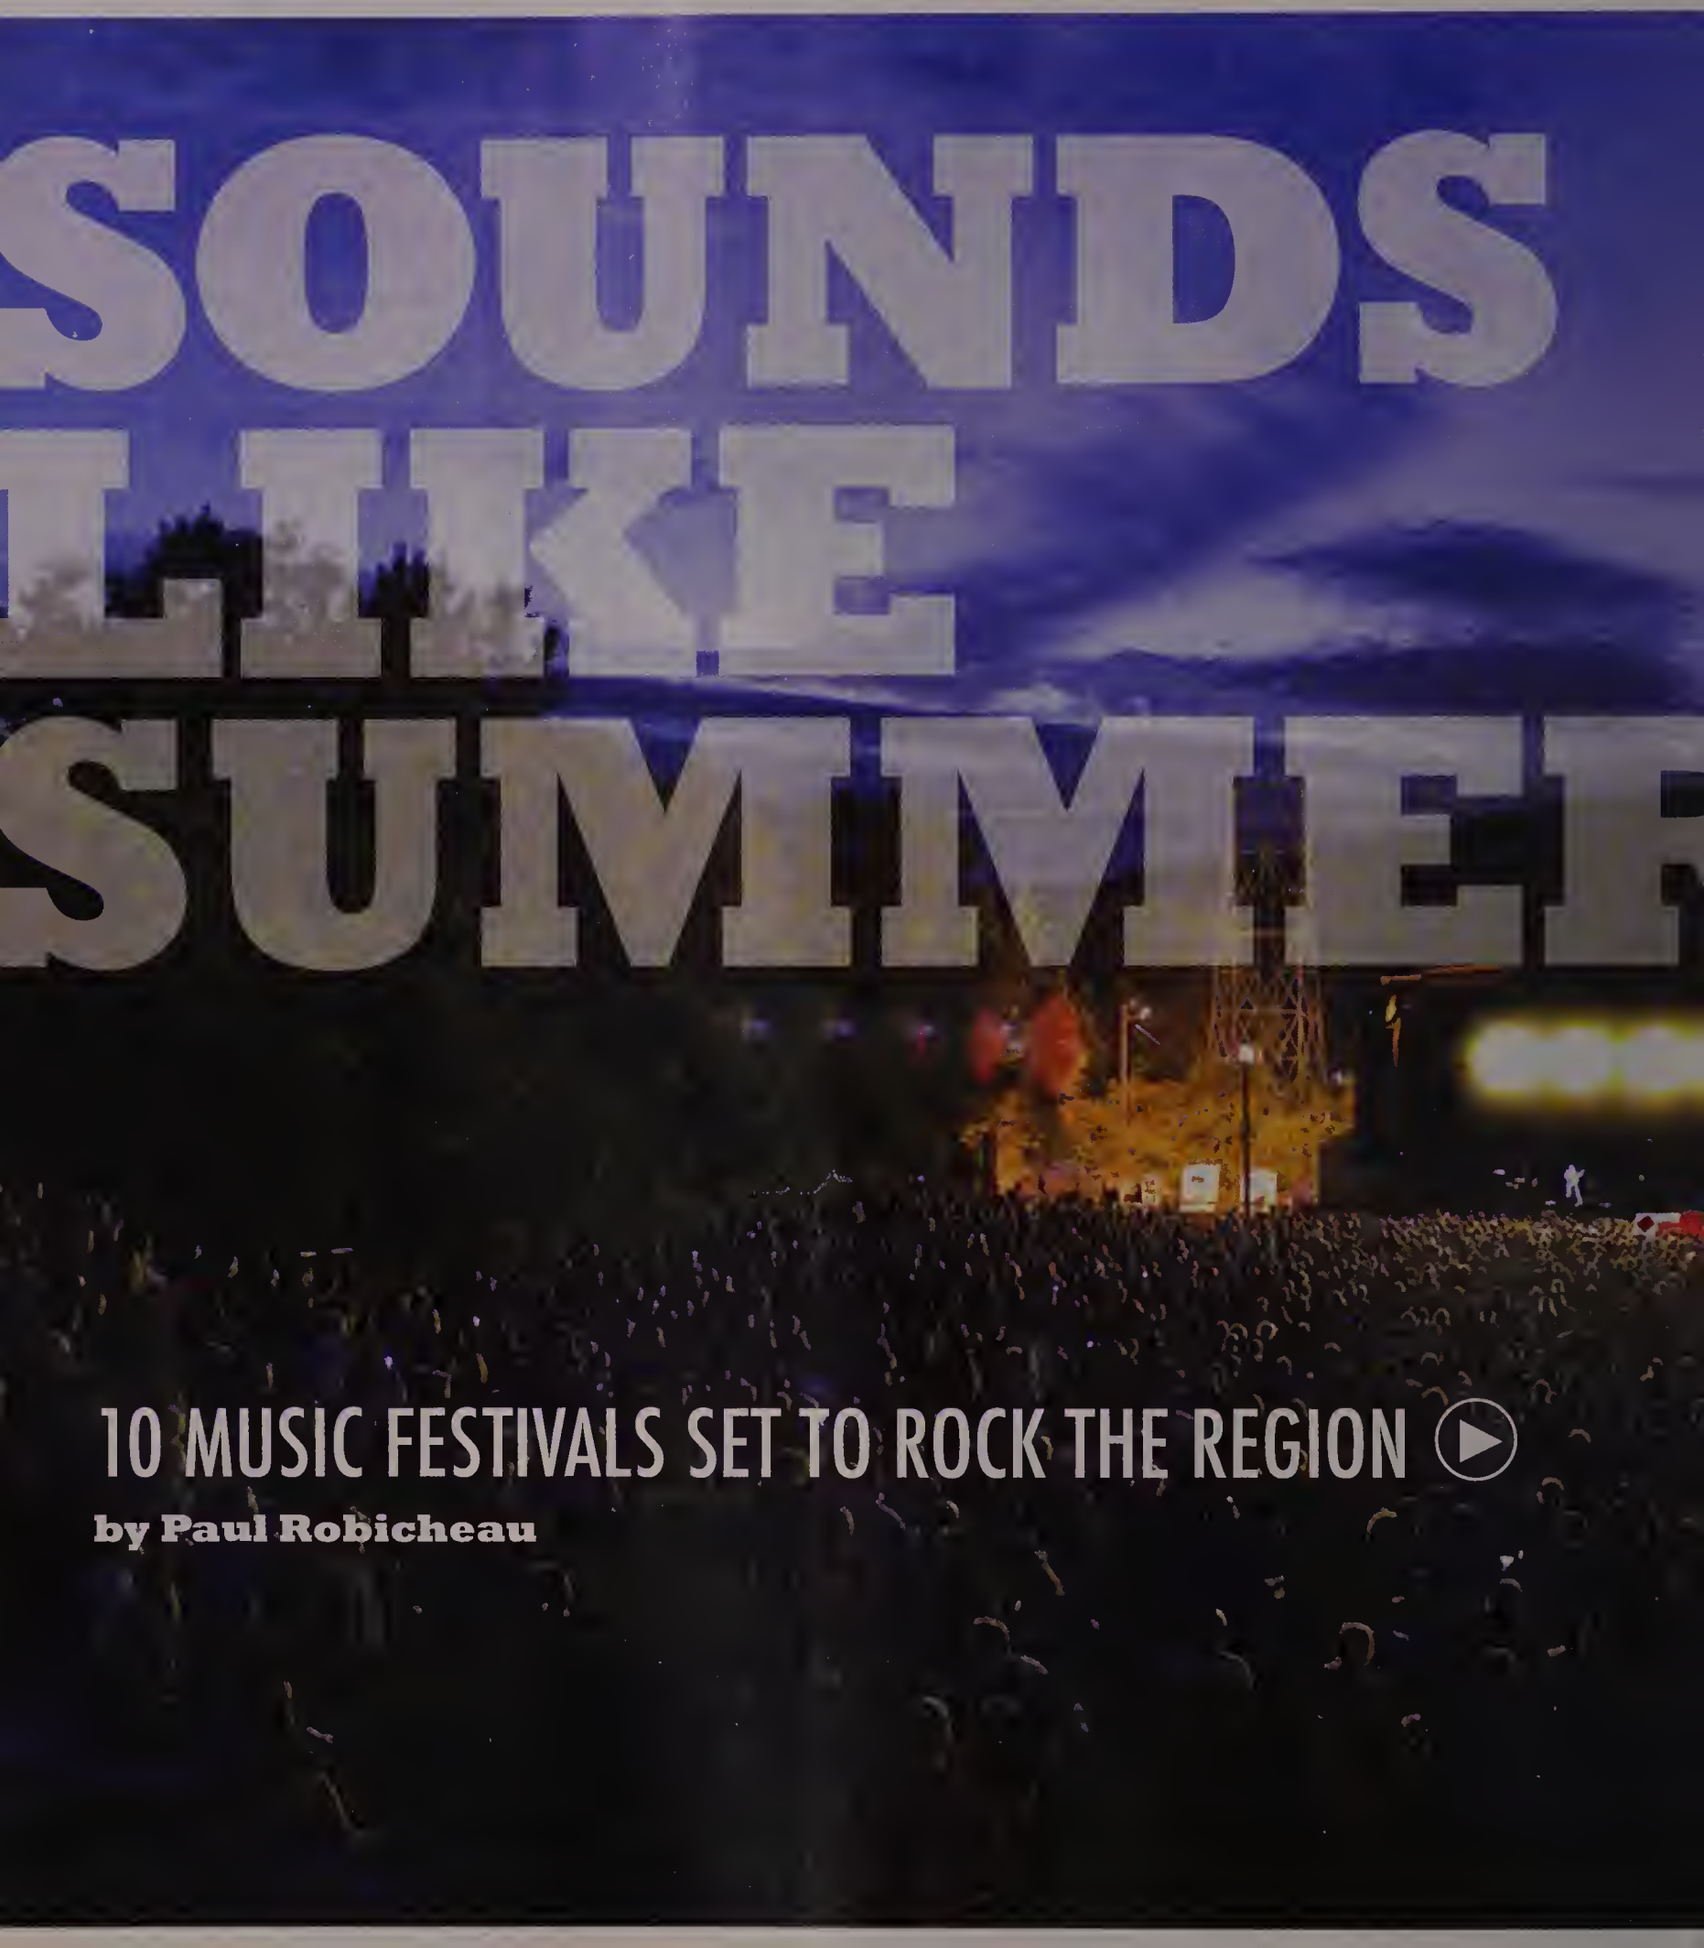
DANCING IN THE STREETS lives up to its name, bringing eight troupes to Somerville parks, plazas, parking lots and even a basketball court on weekend evenings from May 23-July 11. Some highlights: a calligraphy-inspired piece from Chun Jou Tsai, a work that'll have Quicksilver's dancers wrangling with giant elastic bands and a take on the trials of modern tech from BoSoma Dance Company.

HARD TACKLE

Colossal is more than just the title of the play Company One is producing July 17-Aug. 15 at the BCA's Roberts Studio Theatre. It's also the proper adjective to describe the undertaking of playwright Andrew Hinderaker, whose mentor challenged him to write a play that was impossible to produce. Following a football player forced to reconcile with his father after a catastrophic play, the end result includes dancers, a drumline and a structure with four quarters, complete with a halftime show.

CATCH SOME FAMILIAR FACES



JENNIFER COOLIDGE The Boston-born blonde may be forever known as Stifler's mom, but Coolidge is taking on the role of another matriarch for the Nora Theatre Company's production of Saving Kitty, playing July 9-Aug. 2 at Central Square Theater, where she'll portray a liberal atheist who's meeting her daughter's evangelical beau. The show's Bay State ties run deep, as it premiered on Cape Cod and was workshopped at the Williamstown Theatre Festival.

HERSHEY FELDER Summer's usually the time for franchise movies, but Felder's made his name on a franchise of plays known as "The Composer Sonata." The local debut of his first, George Gershwin Alone, came 13 years ago in Cambridge, and his latest, Hershey Felder as Irving Berlin, won rave reviews and smashed box-office records when it debuted in November at the Geffen Playhouse in L.A. Felder and ArtsEmerson bring it to the Emerson/Cutler Majestic Theatre July 8-26 for its East Coast premiere.

JACOB KEMP Spread the news! Known for his role on ABC's Black-ish, the Boston native hits town as part of the NEWSIES cast June 23-July 5, when the touring Broadway production stops by the Boston Opera House. Kemp spent time in the Huntington Theatre Company's young actor program, and he honed his craft as an eight-year company member of Wheelock Family Theatre.

SOUNDS LIKE SUMMER

10 MUSIC FESTIVALS SET TO ROCK THE REGION

by Paul Robicheau

IT'S NO SURPRISE THAT MUSIC FESTIVALS DOMINATE the summer forecast throughout New England, much like the rest of the nation. But you can bet the odds: The 2015 season will explode with better festival options than we've seen since... the last odd year of 2013. Wilco's Solid Sound and the free downtown Outside the Box both return after a year off, joining other multi-day events that include Boston Calling, Newport Folk and Jazz Festivals, the Gathering of the Vibes and the Green River Festival. In town, there's also Summer Arts Weekend, while the third annual Levitate Music & Arts Festival has boosted its wattage on the South Shore. Add all the big regular concerts—including the return of U2 to the TD Garden for four nights, a busy season at Fenway Park peaking with the Foo Fighters and fine Blue Hills Bank Pavilion bills led by Florence + the Machine—and it's one sizzling summer for live music.

BOSTON CALLING

MAY 22-24, CITY HALL PLAZA

The city's season-bookending rock fest keeps on rolling with one of its better, ever-diverse lineups, ranging from dance-pop queen Marina & the Diamonds to hip-hop avatars Run the Jewels and Americana songsmith Jason Isbell. If you've passed on this new institution just to avoid hours of standing on brick and concrete, you're missing out. You can always miss a band or two for a downtown detour—or simply skip the sun for Boston Calling at night, when light shows decorate the face of City Hall. Beck, Tama Impala, My Morning Jacket (behind a dazzling new album) and the Pixies highlight those May nights. Then Boston Calling returns Sept. 25-27, with a lineup that'll be revealed at the May fest.

MOUNTAIN JAM

JUNE 4-7, HUNTER MOUNTAIN, HUNTER, NEW YORK

Just beyond the borders of New England but worth the trip, Mountain Jam has grown from a place for Gov't Mule/Allman Brothers guitarist Warren Haynes to jam with friends into one of the Northeast's biggest fests, boasting the Black Keys, Robert Plant and Alabama Shakes as 2015 headliners. You also get Shakey Graves, Gov't Mule (and their take on Pink Floyd's Dark Side of the Moon), Benjamin Booker, moe. and Grace Potter, who closes the summer Sept. 12-13 in Burlington, Vermont, at her Grand Point North fest, sporting the Flaming Lips and Phish's Mike Gordon. On June 5-14, Burlington also hosts the Discover Jazz Festival, highlighted by the Wayne Shorter Quartet, Mavis Staples, Wadada Leo Smith and Robert Randolph.

SOLID SOUND

JUNE 26-28, MASS MOCA, NORTH ADAMS

In terms of musical diversity and unique infrastructure, this is the pick of the summer. The Wilco-curated fest puts stages in cozy courtyards surrounded by brick mill buildings at the contemporary art museum, while the host headlines two nights on a field. Plus, there's access to kids' activities and sprawling galleries where you can sidestep sun or rain. And this year's cross-genre program is outrageous, spanning indie-rock (Parquet Courts, Mac DeMarco, Real Estate), jazz (Bill Frisell, Charles Lloyd Quartet), folk-rock (Taj Mahal, Richard Thompson Trio), hip-hop (Shabazz Palaces), world music (King Sunny Ade & His African Beats), comedians and Wilco side projects (see p. 49). MASS MoCA also hosts the FreshGrass fest with the Del McCoury Band, Punch Brothers and Leftover Salmon on Sept. 18-20.

GREEN RIVER FESTIVAL

JULY 10-12, GREENFIELD COMMUNITY COLLEGE

This roots-oriented event also runs the gamut this year, from the acoustic stylings of Steve Earle, Punch Brothers, Milk Carton Kids and Valerie June to avant-groove rockers Rubblebucket and Tune-Yards. The mix stretches further with Dinosaur Jr. frontman J Mascis in a quieter mode, cross-cultural party band Red Baraat and Preservation Hall Jazz Band. But what sets this Bay State festival apart are the hot-air balloons, which you can ride or watch rise from the back of the field at sunset.

LEVITATE MUSIC & ARTS FESTIVAL

JULY 11, MARSHFIELD FAIRGROUNDS

If you want to scale back for a worthwhile local day trip, this year's Levitate delivers four major acts in the funky Trombone Shorty & Orleans Avenue and Galactic plus rockers Dr. Dog and the jam-centric Chris Robinson Brotherhood. The energized toaster Collie Buddz and electro-soul duo Kaneholler highlight the rest of the bill.

OUTSIDE THE BOX

JULY 14-19, BOSTON COMMON

This ambitious free performing arts fest, presented by philanthropist Ted Cutler, has shrunk from nine days to six and sticks to the Common in its second outing. Nonetheless, Outside the Box promises more than 100 music, theater, dance and children's performances. The artists will be announced in the coming weeks, but hopes are high since the fest's 2013 debut sported the Mighty Mighty Bosstones, Los Lobos and the Lemonheads.

SUMMER ARTS WEEKEND

JULY 25-26, COPLEY SQUARE

Another free downtown festival, this two-day affair's shaping up nicely with another family-friendly lineup that includes country-folk duo Emmylou Harris and Rodney Crowell, New Orleans' Dirty Dozen Brass Band, fiddler extraordinaire Natalie MacMaster and soul singer Bettye LaVette as

NEWPORT FOLK FESTIVAL

JULY 24-26, FORT ADAMS STATE PARK, NEWPORT, RHODE ISLAND

So far, this year's festival has rolled out a lineup of tried-and-true returnees such as the Decemberists, First Aid Kit, Shakey Graves, Lord Huron and Jason Isbell. Yet the reborn granddaddy of New England festivals also entices with appearances from Sufjan Stevens, Courtney Barnett, Sturgill Simpson, Angel Olsen and Strand of Oaks—plus, we can hope for a late addition, like last year's Jack White. And there's nothing like Fort Adams, flanked on three sides by Newport Harbor, and also the site of the venerable Newport Jazz Festival, which convenes July 31-Aug. 2 with crowd-pleasers Chris Botti, Jamie Cullum and Jon Batiste and Stay Human, plus the great Lisa Fischer, Cassandra Wilson, Jack DeJohnette, Bill Frisell and Dr. John.

GATHERING OF THE VIBES

JULY 30-AUG. 2, SEASIDE PARK, BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT

Here's another sweet waterfront setting, where the Vibes will celebrate its 20th year in the spirit of the Grateful Dead. Alas, this edition competes this summer with Dead survivors' hot-ticket "Fare Thee Well" swan song in Chicago on July 4 weekend with guest Trey Anastasio, whose band Phish also makes its only regional appearance Aug. 21-23 with its grand Magnaball fest in Watkins Glen, New York. Nonetheless, the Vibes mix it up with Wilco, Gregg Allman, Weezer, the String Cheese Incident with David Grisman and Peter Rowan, Tedeschi Trucks Band, Sharon Jones & the Dap-Kings and Billy & the Kids, Dead drummer Bill Kreutzmann's new group with three younger jam-band stars.

RHYTHM & ROOTS

SEPT. 4-6, NINIGRET PARK, CHARLESTOWN, RHODE ISLAND

Another tradition, in its 18th year, this family-friendly festival near the Rhode Island coast still nods to Cajun and bluegrass in a broad lineup that includes the Mavericks, Los Lobos, Keb Mo, Marcia Ball, Corey Ledet, Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys and Della Mae with Jim Lauderdale. Don't forget the daily kids' Mardi Gras parades led by the Hot Tamale Brass Band. And Friday sports a 20th anniversary tribute to the Signature Sounds label led by Lake Street Dive, the jazz soul-pop band also making seasonal rounds at outdoor spots from Northampton's Pines Theater at Look Park to Lowell's Boarding House Park.

WILCO DANNY CLINCH. NELS CLINE: PAUL ROBICHEAU

MUSIC, PAINTING AND DANCE ARE READY TO MELD AT SOLID SOUND

For guitar virtuoso Nels Cline, an experimental improviser before joining Wilco in 2004, Solid Sound is an opportunity to expand his "sound-design world" beyond what he gets to do at other festivals with Wilco. "It's called just getting in the sandbox," says Cline, who has played in guitar duos with Thurston Moore and Julian Lage and jammed with Medeski Martin & Wood at past editions of Solid Sound.

But Cline goes to extremes with true multidisciplinary fun on June 28, presenting his Stained Radiance project with interpretive painter Norton Wisdom in MASS MoCA's indoor Hunter Center. The fellow Californian briskly wields his brushes and scrapers to paint swirling abstract figures live on a large backlit screen while Cline coaxes lush, discordant sounds from his guitar and effects.

"I wanted to get Norton Wisdom at the first Solid Sound [in 2010], but everyone was afraid he was going to make a mess or something and leave paint on things, which he frankly used to do," says Cline, 59, several years younger than Wisdom, whom he met in 1981. "But he's much more self-contained since he's gotten older."

Each uses his eyes and ears to react in the moment. "I won't say it's not a challenge, but there's not a lot of pressure either," Cline says. "If I have a loop or one note going, I can just let it hang until I see where he's going.... If I decide to go sonic nightmare, he might [go in that direction], or he might go visual nightmare and then I go sonic nightmare. Or maybe we never go there and we stay in some sort of mythic, sublime realm."

To add another wrinkle, Cline invited choreographer Sarah Elgart to join in the improvisation, adding to a "chicken or the egg" scenario, he says. "We won't know exactly where the first idea came from, whether it came from sound, image or movement, but it will eventually all be interactive."

It's all in the spirit of Solid Sound, where Cline says he'll try to limit his running around to sit in with musicians, meet fans and practice last-minute surprises with Wilco. "It's very exciting," says Cline, whose wife Yuka Honda will be playing with her band Cibo Matto this year. "But it's also potentially exhausting!" / Paul Robicheau

Somer Lovin'

Taste some local flavors.

IN CASE YOU MISSED IT: Somerville has been quietly but steadily establishing itself as a powerhouse dining and drinking destination over the past few years. With relative newcomers like La Brasa, River Bar and Aeronaut Brewing Company bolstering an already eclectic scene, Somerville has officially put area foodies on notice. So, we're stoked about Taste of Somerville, now in its 17th year and taking over a lot in Davis Square on June 3 for an evening of tasty eats and drinks from the aforementioned spots as well as Bergamot, Bronwyn, Highland Kitchen, Somerville Brewing and more than 30 other purveyors. Proceeds benefit elderly support nonprofit the Somerville Home, so grab your tix while they last. | Alexandra Cavallo

Taste of Somerville runs from 5:30 to 7:30 pm on June 3 at 50 Holland St, Somerville. $50, $75 VIP. tasteofsomerville.com

INSIDE JOB Anyone who still thinks that comedy is a boys' club should get to know Amy Schumer, whose brand of self-aware, unapologetically crass humor proves she's more than capable of rolling with the dudes—or rolling right over them. In her popular Comedy Central series Inside Amy Schumer, now in its third season, the actress/comedian tackles topics from sexting to birth control coverage to the current booty obsession, all with razor-sharp wit and a healthy dose of winking self-effacement. And Schumer recently revealed a talent for comedic music videos—the Internet-breaking "Girl, You Don't Need Makeup" and "Milk Milk Lemonade" (right)—so here's hoping she treats us to a song or two when she drops by the Wilbur Theatre for two stand-up sets on May 28. /Alexandra Cavallo

THE CAT'S MEOW The big 5-0 isn't a highly anticipated birthday for many women, but the badass babes of Faster, Pussycat! Kill! Kill! are still thriving onscreen in the cult hit, which celebrates its golden anniversary this year. Russ Meyer's 1965 flick follows three feisty go-go dancers who take a break from their day job to go on a crime spree in the California desert. The film tanked upon its original release, but the trio has found love among modern audiences and filmmakers like John Waters and Quentin Tarantino. Catch the B-movie classic when it screens on May 22 during the Reunion Weekend series at the Brattle Theatre. / Kate Joseph PHOTO: EVE PRODUCTIONS

THE AGE OF ADALINE ★★ 1/2 Owing a debt to both The Curious Case of Benjamin Button and The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford, Lee Toland Krieger's nutty confection plays like a literary adaptation, down to the narration provided by Hugh Ross, who performed this same vocal duty in the 2007 Western. However, this film's original fiction has less in common with the writing of F. Scott Fitzgerald and Ron Hansen than it does the cheese-filled weepies of Nicholas Sparks. Little surprise, since this picture's co-writer J. Mills Goodloe previously helped adapt Sparks' The Best of Me. Blake Lively plays Adaline Bowman, a 107-year-old beauty who hasn't added a single wrinkle since a 1937 accident froze her in the body of a 29-year-old. Fearing her secret might turn her into a guinea pig, Adaline has lived a largely solitary life, avoiding romantic entanglements. Alas, this unique cougar falls for the philanthropic Ellis Jones (Michael Huisman), setting her toward an unexpected reunion with a man she jilted in the '60s (Anthony Ingruber), who looked and sounded like a young Harrison Ford; he's affectingly played in the present by, well, Harrison Ford. Sweetly idiotic. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

AVENGERS: AGE OF ULTRON ★★ Writer/director Joss Whedon's sequel to his 2012 blockbuster, The Avengers, opens with a well-choreographed sequence highlighting the superhero team's effectiveness. Unfortunately, this isn't matched by the choppy, quick-cut CGI destruction that follows once Tony Stark—the man inside Iron Man—accidentally creates the Avengers' robotic nemesis, Ultron (voiced by a deliciously arch James Spader), who takes on a bit of his dad's ironic sensibilities, quipping so much that his menace is hampered. In fact, much of Whedon's patented banter falls flat, dampening the fun that was so present in the previous picture. Hawkeye, aka Clint Barton, who spent much of the first adventure as a mind-controlled zombie, becomes the most fully formed character, and Natasha Romanoff/Black Widow receives both backstory and an ill-advised romance with Bruce Banner—who transforms into the green-skinned Hulk when his blood pressure rises—while Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr.), Captain America (Chris Evans) and Thor (Chris Hemsworth) have less to do when hurling one-liners at one another. But it's Linda Cardellini, who appears as Barton's civilian wife, that gets perhaps the best line: "You know I totally support your Avenging." So do we. But for how long? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

CLOUDS OF SILS MARIA ★★★1/2 You may not know his name, but know this: Olivier Assayas is one of our greatest living directors. The 60-year-old Frenchman continues to build upon an amazing filmography seen by few in the U.S. with his latest, a challenging drama about acting that comments on celebrity, gossip culture and young, overprivileged starlets. Talky to a fault, it features spectacular acting turns by Oscar winner Juliette Binoche as Maria Enders, an aging actress just past the peak of her international career, and Kristen Stewart as her personal assistant, Valentine. That's right, Twilight's mopey brunette is one of the film's many sly delights, offering a meta-commentary on her own persona in a production that recalls Bergman's chamber dramas, more specifically—and fittingly—Persona. Don't laugh: Stewart became the first American to ever win a Best Actress César (France's Oscar) with this performance, which builds upon her recent criminally unheralded work in Still Alice and the little-seen Camp X-Ray. But this is Binoche's show. As Maria's relationship with Valentine increasingly echoes that of the leads in the play she's rehearsing, Assayas comments no longer, allowing us to interpret his masterfully ambiguous ending. (At Kendall Square, Somerville and West Newton.)

EX MACHINA ★★ 1/2 Many viewers of this science fiction thriller, the directing debut of Alex Garland, writer of Danny Boyle's 28 Days Later and Sunshine, will mispronounce the title of this movie, oblivious to its origins. This is probably for the best, since Garland's script isn't nearly as smart as he seems to think it is. Ostensibly, this is a film about the most advanced artificial intelligence ever created. Too bad writer/director Spike Jonze explored this concept far more effectively two years ago with his Oscar-winning script for Her, which featured a man falling in love with the operating system in his cellphone. That OS was voiced by an unseen Scarlett Johansson, while here, the AI is visibly embodied by Alicia Vikander as Ava. Caleb Smith (Domhnall Gleeson), a programmer at an Internet-search giant, has been brought to the private mountain estate of the company's brilliant CEO, billionaire recluse Nathan Bateman (Oscar Isaac), to evaluate Ava's human qualities, but is there more going on here? Sadly, yes, and the mystifying conclusion leaves you yearning for the halcyon days of murderous AI like 2001's HAL. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Far from the Madding Crowd ★★ Director Thomas Vinterberg has mounted a handsome adaptation of Thomas Hardy's mid-19th-century-set literary classic that's completely superfluous in the face of John Schlesinger's nearly three-hour 1967 version that's superior in every way. Although the Dane has filled his update with strong actors—Carey Mulligan as the self-willed Bathsheba Everdene and Matthias Schoenaerts, Michael Sheen and Tom Sturridge as her three wildly different suitors—they come across as children compared to the earlier cast, which featured British legends Julie Christie, Alan Bates, Peter Finch and Terence Stamp projecting far more palpable longing in the same roles, working from a script by Frederic Raphael that took its time establishing an air of violence that threatened to overtake the sweeping romance at any moment. Vinterberg's picture runs a hair under two hours with a script courtesy of David Nicholls (screenwriter of 2011's romantic drama One Day and author of the novel it's based on). The heat-lacking results play like CliffsNotes as composer Craig Armstrong's score lays the piano and violin strings on thick, overcompensating for the sexual chemistry that was presumably left on the cutting room floor, far from the screen. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Furious 7 ★★★ Before the title has even appeared in the seventh installment of The Fast and the Furious franchise, Jason Statham's Deckard Shaw has single-handedly destroyed much of a London hospital in his quest for vengeance against the people responsible for gravely injuring his little brother, Fast & Furious 6's baddie. His targets? The close-knit team of Dominic Toretto (Vin Diesel), who's first seen involving himself in a "Race War," which is more innocent than it sounds (this isn't Get Hard, people). Returning for one final ride is the late Paul Walker as Brian O'Conner. Walker, who died in an unrelated car wreck during production, is nevertheless introduced behind the wheel...of a minivan. Brian's now a dedicated dad, fitting with the series' sentimental focus on "family." Watching his son hurl toy cars, he tells the boy, "Cars don't fly." Except when they do. Whether dropped from planes, jumping off mountains or driven between two skyscrapers, Furious 7's exotic vehicles spend much of their time airborne. Switching lanes from horror to action, director James Wan (Saw, Insidious and The Conjuring) gets up to speed quickly, hardly letting off the gas as he steers Walker toward a graceful ride into the sunset. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hot Pursuit ★ The montage that opens the new comedy directed by Anne Fletcher (The Proposal) shows Rose Cooper, a police officer's daughter (played in rapid succession by Maggie Hance, Abigail James Witherspoon and Harley Graham), growing up in the back seat of a squad car—her dad even drives her and a terrified date to their high school prom. Inevitably, she becomes a cop herself, played as an adult by Reese Witherspoon, who produced the film with her co-star, Sofía Vergara. You begin to wonder if Officer Cooper ever had a life outside of the cop car though, since she's a glorified idiot who doesn't know how to interact with human beings, and certainly not with Daniella Riva (Vergara), the saucy wife of a drug boss she's been assigned to protect as they snake their way across Texas, pursued by crooked police and murderous hitmen. Frustrated in their search for good comic roles, the two actresses commissioned this script by David Feeney and John Quaintance, proving that it's just as easy to make terribly predictable, unfunny comedies when you're in charge of the production. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

I'll See You in My Dreams ★★★ Blythe Danner shines in this comic drama directed by Brett Haley. She plays Carol, a retired schoolteacher and former singer in her 70s who's been widowed for 20 years. Her tranquil routine of playing cards with close friends (nice turns by Rhea Perlman, Mary Kay Place and June Squibb), tending to her garden and (especially) relaxing over a glass of wine is disrupted when her beloved dog dies. All alone in her spacious LA home, she finds loneliness creeping into that routine, until two new men enter her life: Lloyd (Martin Starr), the 30-something pool man who begins sharing that wine with her, and Bill, the gravelly-voiced old cowboy (played by Sam Elliott, naturally) who begins wooing Carol, who hasn't dated since her husband's death. The script, courtesy of Haley and Marc Basch, avoids veering into cliche, and Danner exhibits an easy rapport with the ensemble that belies the compressed shooting schedule on this charming independent production. Some tears are shed, but Danner's transcendent turn behind the mic at a karaoke bar keeps the movie singing. A nice, small-scale alternative to blockbuster fatigue. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

True Story ★★ 1/2 British theater director Rupert Goold makes his feature debut with this character study, which he's adapted from disgraced New York Times reporter Michael Finkel's memoir, and his stage roots show. Michael (Jonah Hill) appears mostly in two locations: the Montana home he shares with his wife, Jill (Felicity Jones), and inside the visitation room at the Oregon jail where accused murderer Christian Longo (James Franco) awaits trial. Michael seeks redemption in writing a book about Longo, a man who used his name and identity to evade an FBI manhunt. While the relationship and dialogue that develops between these two recalls Capote, Bennett Miller's superior 2005 drama was anchored by a superb Oscar-winning performance by Philip Seymour Hoffman. Funnyman Hill does well with another dramatic role, but Franco fails to rise to the occasion. It's Jones, however, who truly shines. And while I doubt there's much truth to Jill's contrived scene opposite Christian, it's nevertheless a well-written one in which she performs masterfully. Unfortunately, when the information appearing in a printed onscreen coda is more interesting than the events depicted during the previous 95 minutes, that's another truth that's hard to deny. (In the suburbs.)

The Water Diviner ★1/2 Russell Crowe makes his debut behind the camera and also stars in front of it, playing Joshua Connor, an Australian farmer who's grieving the deaths of his three sons when their mother, Lizzie (Jacqueline McKenzie), takes her own life. The year is 1915, and Joshua decides to honor a promise he made to her by traveling to Gallipoli, where their boys were cut down in battle, and bringing their bodies back home to be reunited with their mom in consecrated ground. If only it were that easy. Although claiming to be inspired by true events, Andrew Knight and Andrew Anastasios' script layers contrivance on top of cliche as Joshua's travels through Turkey find him making a series of narrow escapes from bureaucratic red tape, racial discrimination, residual wartime violence and romantic tension with the proprietress (Olga Kurylenko) of an Istanbul hotel, where he befriends her fatherless boy (Dylan Georgiades). He also comes to respect "Hassan the Assassin" (a stern-faced Yilmaz Erdogan), the major who led the charge against the Connor boys' regiment; this section works fairly well, until Crowe's earnestness is eclipsed by his mawkish sightseeing. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

While We're Young ★★★ Noah Baumbach's eighth film as a writer/director opens with some pointed onscreen quotes from Henrik Ibsen's The Master Builder, establishing the animosity those in middle age exhibit toward the younger generation. Documentary filmmaker Josh (Ben Stiller, star of Baumbach's acerbic 2010 film Greenberg) and his wife/producer Cornelia (Naomi Watts) are a middle-aged couple who open their door to nascent documentarian Jamie (Adam Driver, from Baumbach's last film, 2012's Frances Ha) and ice cream maker Darby (Amanda Seyfried), a much younger couple who crash Josh's continuing-education class. Subtly humorous, naturalistic dialogue lifts Baumbach's best pictures past many of his contemporaries', but it's when he gets bogged down in plot machinations that his movies can sometimes suffer—and there's a surfeit of plot here. Duplicities pile up, as do resentments, but this film isn't Greenberg. The honesty can still be bitter at times, but there's a newfound sweetness that's crept into Baumbach's last two pictures. With the passage of time comes the realization that the cruelty of life doesn't have to sting so hard when tempered with the love of a partner. That, and a good bottle of Scotch to share. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Winter Sleep (Kis Uykusu) ★★★★ Today there are few filmmakers whose work demands they be called "world class," but Turkey's Nuri Bilge Ceylan deserves the label. His latest, epic in both length (196 minutes) and emotional scope, finally arrives for a two-week local engagement a year after winning the Palme d'Or at the Cannes Film Festival, and while it may not be as strong as his films Climates (2006) or Once Upon a Time in Anatolia (2011), not all masterpieces are created equal. Nor is it for everyone. If the running time hasn't frightened you, be aware that the script Ceylan co-authored with his wife and sometime co-star (neither appear in this effort) is inspired by the short stories of Anton Chekhov. As such, this is a very talky picture, with more than one intimate conversation lasting at least 20 minutes. The bulk occur between protagonist Aydin (Haluk Bilginer), a former stage actor and proprietor of a small hotel carved into a central Anatolian mountainside, his much younger wife, Nihal (Melisa Sözen), and his sister, Necla (Demet Akbag), who has just been through a divorce. Resentments seethe as condescension encroaches with the coming snow. Enjoy the chill. (At the Museum of Fine Arts.)

Woman in Gold ★★ While the titular Gustav Klimt painting, referred to as "the Mona Lisa of Austria," is a masterpiece, director Simon Curtis' film about an octogenarian woman's fight to reclaim the famous portrait of her aunt is anything but. The maudlin script by first-time screenwriter Alexi Kaye Campbell doesn't do any favors for Helen Mirren or Ryan Reynolds, the wildly mismatched actors who portray the elderly Jewish woman, Maria Altmann, and her inexperienced young lawyer, Randy Schoenberg, as they fight the Austrian establishment to reclaim the artwork that Nazis stole from her Viennese family. A flashback structure finds Altmann portrayed in her younger years by a surprisingly credible Mirren stand-in, Orphan Black star Tatiana Maslany, but her flight to America alongside her husband (Max Irons) is presented in a hackneyed thriller fashion that cheapens the power of the story, which isn't helped by the paint-by-numbers screenplay that puts as much emphasis on Schoenberg's family as it does Altmann's. True, his grandfather was a famed Austrian composer whose family also fled the Nazis, but Schoenberg's domestic and workplace dramas have little of the resonance of Altmann's larger story. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

MODERN LOVE The members of Unknown Mortal Orchestra empathize with many of their young fans: They're fed up with device-fueled, Internet-driven romance. The psych rockers' single "Can't Keep Checking My Phone," off their new album Multi-Love, is about refusing to substitute 4G connectivity for IRL bonds. Ironically, the continent-straddling group (whose members hail from New Zealand and Portland, Oregon) initially found fame posting tracks online and reaching out to bloggers, but they prefer to keep the tech in their futuristic, tripped-out sound and out of their relationships. MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 playlist, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mo-

saic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call—a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

SISTERS ARE DOIN' IT FOR THEMSELVES

The only person who could have possibly been unhappy with the turnout at Turn on the Light—a benefit for My Life My Choice—was the fire marshal, because the fundraiser to end human trafficking broke both the record for attendance and the fire code. (Don't tell anyone.)

Held at the Seaport Boston Hotel, the evening honored Mayor Marty Walsh and author/survivor Holly Austin Smith, and it attracted the likes of head honcha Lisa Goldblatt Grace and her gorgeous mother, Joan, statuesque brunette Pamela Vargas, the absurdly handsome Alejandro Cardona, blond bombshell Jenny Fitzsimmons, stunning City Councilor Ayanna Pressley and Attorney General Maura Healey, who vowed to prosecute the pimps, which prompted a guest to mutter, "How about prosecuting that guy over there who's dressed like a pimp?"

The lobster rolls and crab cakes were superb, and as someone pointed out, "If you win the auction, you could be lounging on a beach in Mexico and legitimately claim to be ending exploitation."

However, the evening's best remark came from the guest who said, "I'm guessing the auction doesn't include a DVD of Pretty Woman."

THE RUN FOR THE ROSES

Those incredibly beautiful (and vital) horses you see patrolling the Emerald Necklace are unfortunately unable to pay for themselves, so the Friends of the Boston Park Rangers Mounted Unit hosted its third annual Derby Dash to scare up much-needed funds to keep our parks safe.

Held in the atrium of Copley Place, the mint julep-fueled evening had a bit of a fishbowl effect, with shoppers wondering why there were velvet ropes blocking off a bunch of men and women dressed for the Royal Enclosure at Ascot, hats and all. Yours truly was one of the hat judges, which proved to be a tricky business, not only because of the excellent selection but because of how seriously my fellow judges—The Globe's Tina Sutton, The Herald's Erica Corsano and Mix minx Kennedy Elsey—took their responsibilities. However, reason (or bourbon) prevailed, and we were able to crown deserving winners Maggie Ahearn, Laura Baldini, Anastasia Thibodeau and Debora Konig. In between being judgmental, I had the chance to mix and mingle with the likes of mother-and-daughter team Ashley and Skylar Bernon (giving Scarlett O'Hara a major run for her money), gorgeous redhead Chantelle Conti, designer extraordinaire Milicent Armstrong, dapper raconteur David Sebastian Wedemeyer, the lovably wry Brett Randolph, blond bombshell Claudine Lewis, hot ginge Michael Harper, rising star Josh Zakim, brunette beauty Jill Hall, Red Sox rainmaker Beth Krudys, fascinator Nina Lewis-Schroeder and the dapper William, the super suave Tony Fusco, the naturally carbonated Jillian Kuzyk and one woman who responded to a compliment on her Chanel outfit by saying, "It's vintage...as is the cellulite."

The evening's funniest remark: "This was a lovely event, especially because it's been a while since I was mounted by any kind of unit."

PICKUP LINES 101

For its 40th (ruby) anniversary, Victory Programs held its annual Dinnerfest, dubbed the Red Party and Auction, appropriately enough, at Red Lantern.

The afternoon of bidding, kibitzing and imbibing attracted a glaringly good-looking crowd that included style icon Laura Baldini, Mexican firecracker Nelly Carreño, lovable curmudgeon Sammy Levitt, Kiss 108 cutie Jim Clerkin, the super sparkly DJ Glitter, blond bombshell Andrea Marquit Clagett, the adorable Ann Heimlicher, real estate mack daddy David Whitman, handsome husbands David Brown and Ben Perkins, the dashing Joe Antoun, banking hottie Rick Musiol, the ruggedly handsome Scott Galinsky, the Hat Sisters, the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence, and so on and so forth.

"Sunday Funday doesn't feel so decadent when it's for a good cause," said one guest, bidding on an item in the silent auction. "Makes spending my boyfriend's money easier, too."

The afternoon's best quote: "I have an extra room in my bed for you." ◆

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

I STARTED WRITING THIS EDITOR'S LETTER on an empty stomach—big mistake on my part, given all the mouthwatering material in this issue, starting with our cover story's look at some of the most interesting new shellfish dishes in town. Elsewhere, Linh Tran Brincat rounds up some of the hottest-ticket dining events of the season, and Alexandra Cavallo checks in with an on-the-rise startup that's growing veggies in the unlikeliest of places. Meanwhile, Elizabeth Bomze dishes on a haute hot dog, Sarah Hagman gets the scoop on some locally made sprinkles and ice cream, and MC Slim JB enjoys some blasts from our culinary past. Oh, and Matt Martinelli gets a first taste of a new spot serving a nine-course(!) menu nightly. If all that food has you feeling guilty already, bear in mind that Meghan Kavanaugh does check out a unique new fitness studio in this issue—a little aerial yoga, tree climbing or DJ-led dancing should help counteract any calorie bombs. Bon appetit.

A MOBILE FARMING STARTUP TAKES ROOT IN SOUTH BOSTON.

HOLLY RIKE

GREEN GIANT: Freight Farms' new South Boston home boasts live growing walls.

A Growth Industry

New digs means new opportunities for Freight Farms, a Boston-based company that transforms shipping containers into portable farms. Fresh off a $3.7 million round of venture funding, the eco-minded innovators put down roots in South Boston in April, moving into a new headquarters that serves as both a training center for new farmers and a test kitchen where staff members can experiment with crops. Currently they're growing staple veggies like lettuces, but they're hoping to add strawberries, cucumbers and a variety of herbs to the mix. "We want to be growing crops that we can kind of demo and use in office, like making cocktails on a Friday afternoon—like mint juleps, which we've done before," laughs marketing manager Caroline Katsiroubas.

"WE ARE ESSENTIALLY TRYING TO CREATE A MORE SUSTAINABLE AND CONNECTED FOOD SYSTEM."

Founded in 2010, Freight Farms aims to change the way we grow and consume produce with its 40-foot-long Leafy Green Machine, a climate-controlled, LED-lit hydroponic system. "We are essentially trying to create a more sustainable and connected food system," Katsiroubas says. "[The farm] is our flagship product. It's going to allow anyone to grow food 365 days a year."

Anyone with around $80,000 to spend, that is. Buying a freight farm isn't a casual commitment, financially, but it's a one that a would-be farmer can take on with relative autonomy—an industrious individual can operate a farm with 15 to 20 hours of work a week. What happens to the fruits of that labor is up to the farmer. "You can choose whether you want to sell directly to restaurants or to a grocery store like Whole Foods, or a food co-op," Katsiroubas says. "Or you could operate it as more of a nonprofit and give it back to your community." Boston Latin School, for instance, is piloting a student CSA with one of the containers.

After purchasing a portable farm, a new owner undergoes two days of training, either in Southie or at the owner's own site. Then Freight Farms conducts on-site visits before and after the first harvest. "You don't just get the farm and you're left floating out in the abyss trying to figure this out," Katsiroubas says. "We really want to help you through it. We're here to support you if you have financial questions."

Freight Farms also provides tech support, courtesy of an app that lets farmers monitor variables like temperature, carbon dioxide levels and humidity. "You can harvest that data and then spread it to other freight farmers in the network, so that they're able to optimize their growing operation, if you'd found success," Katsiroubas says. "So it's very much founded on information sharing as well." / Alexandra Cavallo

YOU WANT A FARM WITH THAT?

Restaurants like Island Creek Oyster Bar and Eastern Standard are already serving produce grown by Corner Stalk, a Freight Farms client in East Boston, but another local eatery is going a step further. Tasty Burger recently purchased several containers, which the team plans on turning into a farm-slash-restaurant.

"They're essentially taking a few different containers, blowing out the inside and retrofitting them into an actual restaurant, which will house a freight farm on top," Caroline Katsiroubas says. "They'll be growing all their lettuce up top that will go on the burgers inside the restaurant down below."

Tasty Burger, which already has locations in Fenway, Harvard Square, Southie and Back Bay, as well as two food trucks, is aiming to open the new restaurant at a yet-undisclosed spot in Cambridge, according to Katsiroubas. "That's probably going to be happening within the next few months," she says. "Fingers crossed."

Q&A
SHEAR TALENT

Ashley Tisdale rose to fame playing a mean teen queen in Disney's High School Musicol, but now the actress is all grown up and set to star in TBS's Clipped, a new comedy about a group of former high school classmates from different cliques who've hit career setbacks and returned home to Charlestown, where they find themselves working at the same barbershop. We caught up with Tisdale between rehearsals for the show, which premieres June 16. / Alexondro Covollo

HAIR WE GO: Tisdale says her Clipped character was a tomboy in high school

WHAT KIND OF RESEARCH DID YOU DO TO PLAY A BOSTONIAN? I've actually been to Boston several times on tour, and my cousin lives there, so I definitely have experience with the cold days there. [Laughs.] The one thing we were all super nervous about was the accent. But they had the guys take on a heavier accent. I play the girl next door, and it was just a little harsh sounding.

YOU'RE ABOUT TO TURN 30—IS THIS WHERE YOU IMAGINED YOU'D BE WHEN YOU WERE IN HIGH SCHOOL? I think that I have exceeded what I thought I was going to be in high school. I always dreamed of being on a series, but I never imagined the success of what I've experienced so far. But I still have those moments where I think, "Oh man, I haven't done that yet." I'm always challenging myself so I never feel like "I've done it!"

WHAT DO YOU THINK YOU'D BE DOING NOW IF ACTING HADN'T PANNED OUT—WHAT WAS YOUR PLAN B? I didn't really have a plan B! But I went to regular school my whole life, so I think maybe I would have been in the creative writing field. Or maybe journalism.

WHAT CLIQUE WERE YOU PART OF IN HIGH SCHOOL? I didn't really have one. For the first couple years—I had just moved from New Jersey to California—I was just that new girl, and I was super shy. But then I was kind of friends with everybody. [But] I think I felt kind of uncomfortable for a long time, because I'd always acted but I wasn't necessarily comfortable with what I did. It's hard, in school. People bully you for anything. Anything you give them, they will make fun of, so I was definitely well aware of that.

I ALWAYS IMAGINE THAT HOLLYWOOD IS A BIT LIKE HIGH SCHOOL... I definitely would say that. I think everyone knows each other because you audition so much and so you become friends. I knew Blake Lively because her dad was my acting coach for the longest time. I used to model with Lindsay Lohan in New York City. But I think I'm still the kind of person I was in high school where I'm friends with everybody, but not in one particular group. But I've always been able to separate the business from my personal life.

LET'S TALK HAIR: WHAT'S THE WORST HAIRCUT YOU'VE EVER HAD? I've had a couple hair disasters actually. Most recently, I grew my hair out—my bangs especially—for my wedding, and I was so excited about it. And then I went to someone new for a haircut, and they pretty much just chopped my bangs off. Before I could realize what was happening, they were already gone. I was devastated.

ONE HAIRCUT YOU KNOW YOU CAN'T PULL OFF, BUT WISH YOU COULD? I wish that I could pull off a bob. However, I know myself, and I know that after maybe a week I'd just be over it. I always think the idea of cutting your hair is so much fun, and then when you do it you're all like "Oh, why did I do that?"

HOT DAMN: Kirkland's dog will get a makeover from guest chefs in the months ahead.

Good Eats: Doggone Tasty

At Craigie, it's the burger. But at Kirkland Tap & Trotter, chef Tony Maws' pet project is the hot dog. The carefully calibrated link, which runs as a Monday night special, blends fatty cuts of premium pork and beef in an all-natural casing, and it usually comes grilled and nestled in a hearty house-baked pretzel bun with Kirkland's housemade relish and mustard. But during the next four months the fixin's will change, as Maws has an all-star lineup of local guest chefs dressing up the dogs. (First up in June: Ken Oringer.) Even more of an incentive: Half the proceeds will go to Share Our Strength, a national anti-hunger organization. / Elizabeth Bomze

COUNTER CULTURE: Peter Ungár's Tasting Counter will serve nine-course dinners.

THAT'S THE TICKET

THE TINY TASTING COUNTER HOPES TO LEAVE A BIG IMPRESSION.

PETER UNGÁR ALWAYS HAD HIS EYE ON opening a restaurant someday. What he didn't always know was that when he did, he'd be part of a new ticketing trend that's turning the restaurant concept on its head. Journeyman was the first local eatery to adopt a ticketing model, making the shift from reservations last fall, but Ungár's Tasting Counter will offer ticketing from day one when it opens early this month in a 1,000-square-foot space within Somerville's Aeronaut Brewery.

"We're telling our guests to leave your wallet at home. When you buy your ticket, it's like going to a show, a sporting event, a concert," says Ungár, who helmed private dining service the Dining Alternative for a decade after working at the Bristol Lounge. "It's about focusing in on our guests' experience."

Customers who've purchased tickets for one of the two dinner seatings (6 and 8 pm) will be greeted at the door by a sommelier or any member of the kitchen staff who happens to be free at the moment. They'll be taken to a 20-seat counter that's right in the middle of the open-kitchen action. The nine courses will come one after another shortly after the customers are seated. About two hours later, after the second dessert is served, dinner will be done—no waiting for the bill.

"There's no time spent looking for a menu, ordering, waiting for a check. All of that is completely out the door," Ungár says. "You walk in, and the guest's dining experience starts immediately. And when you're done, the end of the meal is apparent and the guest is done and leaves."

Ungár wants the focus to be on the New American-style cuisine, which will use global techniques on local and seasonal ingredients. Of the nine courses at dinner, there will be three appetizers, two fish courses, two meat courses and two desserts. Each preparation will be quite different from the next—a lightly steamed sea bream might be followed by a crispy roasted monkfish served on the bone. And the courses will be paired with flights of wine, beer, sake or non-alcoholic cocktails, so any customers returning before the menu changes each month can get a fresh tasting experience if they choose a different flight.

Despite his hope for a regular clientele, Ungár knows that with fine-dining prices, his restaurant is sure to get tagged as a special occasion destination rather than a neighborhood spot. (Advance tickets are $150-$165 for dinner and $50-$55 for a three-course lunch; walk-ins based on availability will entail a small surcharge.) So he's embracing the idea of offering his customers an experience.

"It's really about the guest witnessing their entire menu come together. For me, the more you know about where a dish is coming from, the more comfortable you are with it and the more you're going to enjoy it and be satisfied with it," Ungár says. "As a joke as a kid, you say, 'Close your eyes and open your mouth.' I'm like, 'No. No way.'"

FRENCH REVIVAL

WHAT DOES JACKY ROBERT have up the sleeve of his well-worn chef's jacket? A new restaurant, that's what. Robert recently sold his financial stake in Petit Robert Bistro and partnered with Samantha Sosnitsky, owner of Pierrot Bistrot, to open Ma Maison in the former Pierrot space. The new French eatery on the Cambridge Street backside of Beacon Hill is slated to open in early June, and it's a space where Robert has a history. Despite being better known for his tenures at Boston classics Maison Robert and Locke-Ober, he was also a consulting chef at Pierrot when it opened in 2004.

Reflecting his mastery of traditional French cuisine as well as his penchant for the occasional Asian culinary accent, the menu encompasses lunch, dinner and dessert options from Monday through Saturday. Lunch starters range from Uncle Lucien's country pâté (a tribute to Robert's late uncle who owned Maison Robert) to lighter items such as chilled gazpacho with shrimp and the very green Boston Celtics salad, made with spinach, haricots vert, asparagus, kelp and seared tuna. Other lunch highlights include short rib bourguignon, quiche Lorraine and a cheeseburger with foie gras. Dinner features a rack of lamb with gratin dauphinois, duck magret with kimchee duck confit purses and even a veggie burger. As for dessert, French classics such as a Grand Marnier souffle, creme brulee and a giant profiterole with chocolat chaud take center stage. And to put the cerise on the sundae, daily specials will tempt offal fans: If it's Tuesday, there must be sweetbreads. Wednesday? Veal kidneys. Friday is the day for calf's brain devotees, and on Saturday, tripes provencale is the star.

OH MA! The new Beacon Hill spot will feature an eclectic French menu.

Drink of the Moment
THE NEWBURY

PRICE: $14

INGREDIENTS: Patron Silver, Cointreau, fresh lime, agave, pomegranate, blueberries

TASTE: There's sweetness from the triple sec and the agave nectar, which also brings a slight smokiness. And you can't miss the Patron's kick, along with the tartness of pomegranate juice and a touch of fruitiness from the muddled blueberries.

INVENTOR: John Huang, beverage director at the Boston Park Plaza Hotel, which unveiled the results of a major lobby renovation in April. The Off the Common bar is completely new, with about 100 seats for off-the-street imbibers as well as hotel guests.

PAIR IT WITH: Something from executive chef Darren Anklam's upgraded menu, such as the smoked chicken, bacon and roasted mushroom flatbread ($13).

WHAT'S IN A NAME: "There's so much history; everyone that grew up here has a story to tell about the Park Plaza," says Huang, whose own prom was held there. "We wanted to feature bits and pieces of the hotel" throughout the menu, as in this cocktail's nod to a Back Bay neighbor and other offerings like the Ask Kennedy, a tribute to daiquiri fan and onetime guest JFK that offers a modern twist with apricot jam.

THE NEXT ROUND: Drinkers who are normally wary of whiskey would do well to sample the Brahmin, a very approachable mix of Berkshire bourbon, muddled basil and mint, agave, lemon and charred grapefruit. "I really believe in balanced cocktails," says Huang, who likes to gently help guests venture outside their comfort zones. / Soroh Hogmon

Working Up a Swet

In time for both bikini season and Pride Week celebrations, a new studio that bills itself as Boston's first dedicated LGBT-friendly fitness space is set to open this month on Tremont Street in the South End (and surely attract clients from Blackbird Doughnuts next door).

Owned by 30-year-old personal trainer Silviya Mihaylova, Swet Studio isn't the place for solo weight lifting or elliptical sessions. Instead, it offers a diverse roster of group classes that range from boot camp and hula-hoop dancing to Indo-Row rowing workouts and balance-perfecting AntiGravity Aerial Yoga. There's even an Organic Teenagers class aimed at getting teens to explore natural movement and look away from their cellphones for at least an hour. Members who pay monthly or preload a card with class passes can also channel their inner child with outdoor runs that incorporate training on playgrounds, tree climbing and fence hopping. And the staff nutritionist will lead field trips to the nearby Whole Foods to teach members how to plan quick, healthy meals and decode food labels.

Indeed, Mihaylova says Swet is just as focused on fostering community as it is on fitness. Ballroom dancing classes that welcome same-sex partners are planned, as are speed-dating nights and DJed dance parties. "I just felt there's a need for a studio where you can go have fun, work out and keep in contact with people that live that lifestyle," Mihaylova says, noting that the 2,300-square-foot space has a lounge and fireplace for prime mingling. "It's not just a place where you just come, work out and then leave. I wanted to create an atmosphere for people to feel like they have us for support." / Meghan Kavanaugh

OH, SUGAR

Summer's a little sweeter with Chloe Jankowitz upping the sprinkles game. The treats from the Scoopsies owner—who got her start at J.P. Licks after high school—are over the artificial rainbow; she uses natural dyes like beetroot powder for rose and spirulina extract for mint. The Emerson grad also mixes her own batches of ice cream, so she suggests pairing cardamom sprinkles with her prosciutto melon flavor, topping Eton mess (roasted strawberry and meringue ice cream) with lavender sprinkles or, for sugar and spice, capping orange creamsicle habanero ice cream with anise sprinkles. Find the goodies at the Dewey and Kendall Square farmers markets or at scoopsiesicecream.com, where you can sign up for her just-launched Scoopscription—two pints hand delivered to your doorstep monthly. MILES IN HER SHOES

A LOCALLY RAISED JOURNALIST AND AUTHOR PUTS HER BEST FOOT FORWARD IN A NEW MEMOIR.

9 1/2 Narrow* by Patricia Morrisroe
Published by Gotham Books, 256 pages, $27

PATRICIA MORRISROE BEGAN HER LIVELY trot through life in Andover, where her love for shoes started with a crush on a little friend's white Mary Janes. She successfully lobbied for her own pair, only to have her quirky mother—her comic foil throughout this book—offhandedly inform her that she was born with 12 toes.

Those Mary Janes are the jumping-off point for this memoir, told through favorite pairs that define each era of Morrisroe's life. As an adolescent, she falls for wedgies, and the sight of Jackie Kennedy's Ferragamo version validates her obsession; wearing a pair to her own confirmation is as significant as the event itself. When the Beatles hit, she and her pals form a little band and wear their iconic boots—black with side zippers and Cuban heels—to the horror of Sister Superior. And later there's much wobbling in stilettos.

What's entertaining about her life story and footwear adoration is the irony Morrisroe blends into every scene; her comic timing brings peels of laughter, even when her mother is being pilloried. Romances and a peripatetic career in journalism also spark wry observations: In Hollywood, her boyfriend interviews Schwarzenegger, who says, "Doomp the leetle guy and be vid me." No dice, Arnold. She finally meets her match in a man as close to his beloved Pumas as she's been to her shoes, leading to a walk down the aisle in heels preworn, of course, by her mother.

FROM PAGE 182: Female activist Beatrice Faust believes that high heels are not just a turn-on for men. By making the buttocks undulate twice as much, they spread sexual sensations throughout a woman's body. Since I've never walked far enough in high heels to experience multiple undulations, I'll have to take her word for it. ◆

SACRED VALLEY HIGH

WALK IN THE SHADOW OF THE INCA EMPIRE WITH A VERMONT-BASED TOUR ORGANIZER.

THE WORLD WAS SHAPED FROM LLAMA fat. That's why the eldest of three Andean priests sitting before you in Cuyuni, a Peruvian village perched in the Andes about two hours outside Cusco, adds a bit to the collection of objects at his feet. He wraps the entire offering in paper and carries it over the hill to place it beneath a brick of smoking cow manure. There, it burns. Someone beats a drum, blows a whistle, plays a flute, and together with rest of the Cuyuni tribe—Mestizo descendants of the ancient Incas—who've come to witness the ceremonial offering to Pachamama, or Mother Earth, you amble through the mist at 13,700 feet, chewing coca leaves, in pursuit of something much bigger than Machu Picchu.

You just don't know it yet.

The so-called Lost City of the Incas is, of course, the main draw for many visitors to Peru. And with good reason. Lying unknown to the modern world for half a millennium, hidden in the cloud forest one and a half miles above sea level, Machu Picchu is, simply, a marvel. Blinking at you from Intipunku (or the Sun Gate), the archaeological site has become a bucket-list adventure for some 73,000 visitors who trek the Inca Trail each year. But since 2002, you've needed a certified guide to do it—which is where VBT comes in.

The New England-based adventure outfitter specializes in bicycling vacations (hence the name Vermont Bike Tours) as well as walking excursions, such as the eight-day Machu Picchu and Sacred Valley experience in Peru. It's a boutique vacation ideal for the active traveler but lazy planner.

Comfort comes in reliable transportation and high-end lodgings such as Casa Andina Private Collection Valle Sagrado, where each room has a private terrace or balcony that captures transcendent views of the surrounding Andean foothills. The tour's 16 meals offer tastes of tradition: Incan delicacies such as guinea pig and corn beer test iron stomachs, while pisco sours and fresh ceviche soothe them. VBT's value, however, lies in its four local guides, who rotate in pairs to lead each trip and serve as proud proprietors of the land's culture and history. They ensure that the thoughtful and creative itinerary touches your every sense, awakening, delighting and provoking each in turn as you walk in the shadow of the Inca Empire and its living legacy.

And walk you will. You'll hike some 25 miles as you explore more than a dozen Inca sites that weave the civilization's myths into a historical tapestry you can reach out and touch. But before the Vistadome train drops you off at the 104-kilometer marker and your hike to Machu Picchu begins, VBT takes you back to pre-Inca times with a visit to the Urubamba outdoor farmers market, often overlooked by tourists. The locals come here to shop and sell: In place of alpaca scarves and Peruvian tchotchkes are squealing swine and guinea pigs, produce galore and fragrant spices piled high in sacks that sit open on the ground. Buy a bunch of small bananas, which come fresh from the cloud forest each morning and make our fruit taste candy-artificial in comparison.

Later, you visit the Moray archaeological complex. Though its amphitheater of concentric circles makes it look like a parting gift from otherworldly visitors, Moray was more likely an Incan agrarian laboratory of sorts. From there, the guides lead you across a deserted landscape and down a snaking agave-lined trail that unwinds without warning almost on top of the salineras de Maras—the salt mines.

Reflecting from the reddish-brown mountainside into which they were built, 3,000 shallow, angular pools form muddy terraces that, at first glance, appear snow dusted. But it's all salt—Maras salt. The mud pans capture hot water from a subterranean spring, crusting over with the white mineral as the pools evaporate under the sun. Planks of wood allow you to cross the mines, greeting the occasional worker from the Maras community, who've tended and harvested the beds for more than 1,000 years—long before the Incas even had a name.

You'll spend the next 48 hours cursing that name in awe and pain, going weak in the knees and hardening your muscles against the strain of near-vertical ascents—often at the same time. The hike to Machu Picchu takes your breath away, both in physical beauty and demand, testing your limits for each. After a guided tour of the main site, you'll be given the option to see the Inca Bridge. Take it.

Carved into the cliff and threatening 1,900-foot drops, the Inca Bridge is actually a 20-foot gap, linked by two tree trunks, on a narrow stone path that leads west of Machu Picchu. It protects the citadel, a defense against intruders who'd be left without a means of crossing when the trunks were removed. The nearly half-mile drop is still there (without a guard rail) and the stones are slippery, but—as is the case throughout Peru's Sacred Valley—the view and living history are worth the danger, too enchanting to miss. ◆

OLDE AND NEW

HISTORICAL AND MODERN NEW ENGLAND MEET IN CAMBRIDGE.

LOYAL NINE
660 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-945-2576)
loyalninecambridge.com

EVIDENCE OF BOSTON'S DEEP-ROOTED history is everywhere you look, from actual landmarks like Faneuil Hall to kitschier simulacra like downtown tour guides in tricorn hats. But that doesn't extend to our dining scene: Visitors hoping for a taste of Colonial cuisine might hit the touristy, allegedly historical Durgin-Park, only to find more 20th-century dishes than 18th-century ones. Loyal Nine, a new East Cambridge restaurant named for an obscure group of revolutionary conspirators, isn't going for faithful re-enactment, but draws on concepts and ingredients from early New England cookery to very original and frequently lovely effect.

Executive chef Marc Sheehan starts by drawing on sustainable seafood like Scituate periwinkles ($8) steamed in hard cider, tiny sea snails that you dig out of their shells with toothpicks. It's messy work, but worth it to sample an underused, delectable local species. Grilled surf clam ($12), chopped, chilled and served in its shell with pickled garlic scapes and melting sauteed leeks, is a novel, delicious preparation of a big offshore clam that's usually buried in clam strips or chowder. Matelote ($17), squid braised to tenderness in red wine, is fantastic in color and texture, but even so is outshone by a big, fluffy dumpling filled with rich bone marrow. Slices of butterfish ($9) are soused in liquor, served over piquant horseradish dressing and topped with thin radish slices, all resting atop a round of wondrous molasses-sweetened brown bread. Sheehan's phenomenal pastry chef, Adam Ross, provides a gorgeous foundation to many dishes here. (He also does the terrific breads and pastries sold in the adjacent all-day cafe.)

Another dish that benefits from great bread is nettles ($9), an emerald puree of young leaves on toasted sourdough topped with prosciutto-like slices of smoked duck breast, pickled green tomatoes and toasted ground pumpkin seeds. In a clever nod to both shore-food shacks and his Portuguese neighbors, Sheehan does a fried clam and pig ear roll ($14) with a relish of bitter greens. A plate of asparagus ($11) is grilled, chilled, dotted with crunchy almonds and dressed in cultured cream, simple and fine. Bok choy ($16) looks lovely, dotted with a littleneck or two, green garlic, of-the-moment fiddleheads and caviar, but is inedibly underwashed, loaded with sand. No such mistake haunts the sallet ($6), a pretty presentation of soft lettuces rolled and tied with a sprig of basil, perfectly dressed with hard-cider vinaigrette and hiding pockets of good aged goat cheese.

Aroostook savory supper ($14) layers a small crock with potato and onion slices crowned with a soft-poached egg and a translucent square of salt pork; it's creamy, mild and satisfying in a way that exceeds the sum of its parts—an ancient Down East comfort food. Pondemnast ($16) is a comforting porridge of farro and winter wheat topped with hen-of-the-woods mushrooms, boned and confited turkey neck (tasting like the best bits of a brined Thanksgiving bird) and a soft-poached egg yolk, all edged with a vivid mustard-green sauce. You can't Google "pondemnast" to useful effect, but you'll want to remember it. Among larger plates, Cornish cross chicken ($22) serves rich confit thighs and skin-on breast prepared to moist crispness on the plancha, accompanied by pureed celery and excellent croutons of white flint cornbread. Lobster ($18) braised in hickory nuts and mead is a half-lobster in the shell sans claws, mostly tail meat, like an updated baked stuffed lobster.

Excellent desserts include a hard-cider syllabub ($7), reminiscent of a stiff panna cotta with a layer of wild-apple preserves topped with crisped milk meringue. Sourdough chocolate brewis ($13) feeds two with a gorgeous centerpiece of nearly unsweetened chocolate bread pudding and accompaniments of cocoa nibs, smoked toffee sauce, spicy pepita brittle, yeast streusel, honeycomb candy and chocolate syrup, a fabulous combination of savory and sweet. Among the many terrific fourth-wave coffee preparations, tableside siphon coffee ($9), which also serves two, boasts the most dramatic presentation.

Bar manager Bryn Tattan's cocktail program features terrific originals like the Flying Nun ($11) of whiskey, pickled black walnut and lemon with an atomized spritz of Scotch on top, like a smoky, slightly briny whiskey sour. Rums, brandies and eaux de vie are also featured, with some nice-priced options like Laubaude Bas-Armagnac ($12). Wines include sprightly, food-friendly offerings like the 2011 Bernard Vallette Née Bulleuse Gamay ($13), a fruity, off-dry, deep-pink sparkler from Beaujolais.

The handsome, spare room features nearly 100 seats at long tables, a comfortable bar and a dining bar at the open kitchen; concrete floors and hard wood surfaces contribute to a nearly uncomfortable din at peak periods. An airy 30-seat patio, where the kitchen grows produce and herbs, sits by a rarely used railroad spur. Service is casually attentive and informal, ever ready to demystify the menu's obscurer terms, though first-timers should ask for help in sorting out the variable-sized smaller plates to order appropriately.

Ultimately, Sheehan and his talented crew pull off a delicate bit of sleight-of-hand: taking historical recipes that could seem dull if reproduced too faithfully, melding them cleverly with techniques and flavors unknown in Colonial times, and tapping underused local ingredients to create something novel and fascinating. Loyal Nine has moved way beyond cod cakes and baked beans to forge something welcome and new: Call it New Colonial cuisine. ◆

Q: NOW THAT WARMER WEATHER IS HERE I CAN'T HIDE MY STOMACH UNDER MY CLOTHES AS EASILY. PLEASE TELL ME ABOUT THE NEW FAT FREEZING PROCEDURE I'VE BEEN READING ABOUT.

A: CoolSculpt is a very effective non-invasive body contouring treatment. The procedure freezes unwanted fat, killing off fat cells which are then naturally eliminated from your body. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime. It is safe and effective.

Many of us have problem areas, such as our abdomen, love handles or saddlebags. CoolSculpting uses controlled cooling to target, freeze and kill fat cells; only fat cells are affected. After treatment, the crystallized fat cells are gradually removed from our body by our lymphatic system, resulting in up to a 20–25% reduction of the fat in the treated area. Results are visible within six weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after three months.

At SkinHealth, our clients have seen remarkable results with CoolSculpting!

FLIPPING THE BIRD

SERMONIZING SINKS BRAD BIRD'S SCI-FI ODE TO EXCEPTIONALISM.

Brad Bird may not be a household name, but to those in the know, this natural-born filmmaker is exceptional. Even if you've never seen his first feature, the mostly hand-animated masterpiece The Iron Giant, you're likely familiar with the computer-animated Pixar classics he wrote and directed, The Incredibles and Ratatouille.

Bird spread his wings into live action with 2011's Mission: Impossible – Ghost Protocol, where he brought his eye for cartoon physics into play, putting franchise star Tom Cruise through nearly as many superhuman paces as the family of heroes in The Incredibles. As Bird enjoys celebrating members of society who possess great gifts, the two-time Oscar winner might well be making movies about himself.

So, it's with a heavy heart that I report that his latest, Tomorrowland, is a mixed-message mess. A science-fiction mystery adventure starring George Clooney, it continues to celebrate the exceptional, but with the unexpected implication that those who are average have no place in tomorrow's world.

Nevertheless, the Walt Disney production's visual marvels are apparent from the outset, when Bird whimsically replaces the Magic Kingdom in the Mouse House's animated logo with the titular retro-futuristic cityscape. He then segues to a close-up of Clooney's face, the Academy Award-winning actor and producer looking a bit grizzled as he directly addresses the camera: "This is a story about the future, and the future can be scary." Clooney plays former boy genius Frank Walker, who's interrupted by the off-camera voice of peppy high-schooler Casey Newton (25-year-old Britt Robertson of The Longest Ride). She chastises the now middle-aged, reclusive grump: "Are you sure you want to say 'scary'?"

The two squabble over the best approach to telling the tale that's about to unfold, and it becomes clear that neither Bird nor his co-writer, Damon Lindelof, were able to crack the film's structure, either. It's all setup, setup, setup, with an extended first act that starts, then restarts before nearly skipping a second act entirely, racing toward a finale that's heavy on monologues (a device Bird comically railed against in The Incredibles) while leaving many questions naggingly unanswered. I'll note here that Lindelof is co-creator of TV's Lost...

Bird flashes back to the prepubescent Frank (a winning Thomas Robinson of The Switch), who arrives by bus at the 1964 World's Fair lugging a jetpack made from modified vacuum cleaner parts. Entering an inventors' competition, he shows his semi-functional prototype to the dour judge, David Nix (Hugh Laurie of TV's House M.D.), who takes one look at the ramshackle device before asking, "But how would it make the world a better place?" A wide-eyed Frank replies, "Why can't it just be fun?"

Frank catches the eye of Athena (real find Raffey Cassidy, giving the film's richest performance), a mysterious preteen who might be Nix's daughter, even if she knows how to smile. She directs him to discreetly follow her and Nix as they board the It's a Small World boat ride (this is, alas, another film built around Disney theme park attractions), and Frank finds himself spirited away to an alternate dimension. Emerging on a metal catwalk in the clouds, Frank is dazzled by the colorful wonders of Tomorrowland below, like Dorothy when she first set foot in Oz. Only instead of lions and tigers and bears, he's greeted by a hulking robot, who repairs—and enhances—Frank's damaged jetpack before giving the boy a mechanical thumbs up.

TOMORROWLAND* ★★

Starring George Clooney, Britt Robertson, Raffey Cassidy, Tim McGraw, Thomas Robinson, Pierce Gagnon, Kathryn Hahn, Keegan-Michael Key, Chris Bauer, Matthew MacCaull, Shiloh Nelson, Judy Greer and Hugh Laurie. Written by Brad Bird and Damon Lindelof, based on a story by Bird, Lindelof and Jeff Jensen. Directed by Brad Bird. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Demonstrating his talent for cleanly presented action, Bird sends Frank swooping through the magical utopia on that jetpack, until the boy sets down directly in front of Nix, who shoots an icy stare. Cutting back to the adult Frank, he has Clooney conclude his opening monologue: "...and then everything went to hell."

He ain't kidding. As Casey takes her stab at telling the story, the film shifts into the much more recent past, showing the teenager sneaking out at night to sabotage equipment that's dismantling the space shuttle platforms at Cape Canaveral, where Casey's dad (Tim McGraw) faces unemployment as a NASA engineer "with nothing to launch."

She may be a juvenile delinquent, but Bird also sees her as exceptional (her gift: optimism). So does Athena, who transports Casey to a second, wholly redundant reveal of Tomorrowland. Bizarrely, Athena hasn't aged a day in 50 years. But that's not nearly as strange as the sight of 54-year-old Clooney gazing goo-goo-eyed at Cassidy's Athena, which the script requires in its rush to blow things up in the schizophrenic and sermonizing finale.

It continues to celebrate the exceptional, but... those who are average have no place in tomorrow's world.

Proclaiming that utopia can only be achieved through positive thinking, Frank posits that society has poisoned its well by celebrating and consuming dystopian entertainments focused on crime, the collapse of social mores, environmental disaster, wars and nuclear annihilation, concluding that our favorite movies amount to a "self-fulfilling prophecy." This, after Bird's film has violently dismembered and abused human-looking robots, vaporized three police officers, and—in true Disney fashion—punished the token villain with death. But remember, kids: positive thinking!

Meanwhile, I'm positively thinking I'd rather be entertained by another viewing of the dystopian Mad Max: Fury Road than be told why I shouldn't. To paraphrase young Frank, why can't movies just be fun? ◆

LINDSEY STIRLING plays the Blue Hills Bank Pavilion on June 13.

Music / Paul Robicheau

A VIOLIN SENSATION SHATTERS EXPECTATIONS WITH HER ELECTRONIC MASHUPS

IT'S A PHENOMENAL FEAT FOR AN ARTIST TO top the classical, pop and dance/electronic charts, and even more unusual to do it as a violin soloist. But this is the new age of Lindsey Stirling, who brings youthful spirit to her near-billion-viewed YouTube videos and concerts that mash up classical technique and Celtic/dubstep dancing.

"I don't even pretend to be the best violinist out there," says Stirling, 28, who plays Blue Hills Bank Pavilion on June 13 with a keyboardist, a drummer and four female co-dancers. "My strongest suit is that I'm an entertainer, and it's the creative vision of the entire package that's brought me to where I'm at."

She's at a crossroads of styles and cultures, a place where Stirling dresses up in fantasy videos, performing music from video games like Zelda and Skyrim and covers of both pop tunes and the Game of Thrones theme song, as well as originals. Her second independently issued album, Shatter Me, debuted in 2014 at No. 2 on the Billboard Top 200 pop chart and No. 1 on the iTunes album chart, in addition to logging 21 weeks atop the Billboard classical chart. The album includes vocal turns by Halestorm rocker Lzzy Hale and Dia Frampton, a former finalist on The Voice who serves as an opener on Stirling's tour.

The violinist also recently joined rapper Wiz Khalifa in performing his hit "See You Again" from the movie Furious 7 at the Billboard Music Awards and paired with John Legend to film a video of his single "All of Me." Given her diverse collaborations and swirling, syncopated productions, Stirling inhabits a world that bridges Disney, Dvorak and EDM.

"I enjoy the fact that people don't know how to categorize my music," Stirling says from her tour's launch spot in Vancouver. "I've never thought that things have to be categorized, like who says everything has to go in a box? That's a big theme of my life."

She earned her big break on America's Got Talent in 2010, making the quarterfinals before the judges sent her packing, suggesting that her mix of hip-hop, dance and violin had its limitations. "It was actually devastating at the time," Stirling says. "That was a huge initiation into getting some thick skin... I thought, 'I'm going to prove them wrong. I'm going to get better. I'm going to practice my tail off, and I'm going to show them that I can do it.' These [talent] shows give you a shot, but even if you win, those moments don't make you or break you."

"I've never thought that things have to be categorized, like who says everything has to go in a box?"

Before playing to millions on television, Stirling hadn't played in front of more than 100 people in one room. She grew up in a Mormon family, with parents who favored classical music. But they couldn't afford to give her both violin and dance lessons, Stirling says, so she took up violin at age 6 and became a self-taught dancer. In high school in Arizona, she played violin in a rock group, then joined a country band and eventually turned to hip-hop and dubstep.

"I kept experimenting until I discovered what I wanted my music to sound like," Stirling says. "I've always loved electronic music—I love that it makes you want to dance. You go to some of these EDM shows, and it's amazing to watch an entire audience move in sync together, like it has a power of emotion."

Shatter Me taps into particularly personal emotions about her battle with anorexia around the time of America's Got Talent. "I basically started to give up every single thing in my life to keep this one control, and really, it was controlling me," she says. "I had to gain weight and, more importantly, to teach my mind to think healthy again."

The album's cover art and the video for the title track depict Stirling as a music-box ballerina poised to crack out of a crystal ball. "I related so strongly to this image of being trapped, but feeling like what's trapping you is also protecting you," she says. "She's flawless. But as she stands there, she'll never be able to change... I had this facade that I had to break through in order to progress." ◆

MINOR THING

WATCHING THE FARM TEAM PLAY CAN BE A MAJOR RELIEF.

I WORRY THAT BASEBALL IS BORING. I LOVE baseball, but the pace of the game seems archaic, its bursts of action mired in too much downtime. Hell, baseball can even be boring when you're playing it. I played Legion ball in high school, and during one particularly excruciating inning, I glanced over at our center fielder to see him lackadaisically smoking a cigarette. And why not? We had nothing but time, as our pitcher followed each ball or strike with a stroll around the infield, meticulously adjusting his jock while the opposing batter went on an introspective walkabout. In another game, on my way back to the dugout, I noticed that our first baseman had spent the inning drawing a penis in the dirt along the baseline. That earned a reprimand from the umpire, but no disciplinary action. Maybe the ump was impressed by how he incorporated first base into the tableau.

Against this backdrop and the plodding pace of major league games, I'm not optimistic that my kids will love baseball. Nonetheless, I decided to take them to a pro ballgame to find out if baseball has a chance of recruiting the iPad generation. To stack the odds in my favor, though, I took them to a minor league game—Durham Bulls versus Scranton Rail-Riders. On Star Wars night.

The beauty of minor league baseball is that nobody involved seems to take it too seriously. The Charleston RiverDogs once tried to schedule Vasectomy Night, which got shot down by the league, but they will go forward this season with Bromance Night and Bobble-Boobs Night. The RiverDogs' president is Mike Veeck, whose father, Bill, once signed a dwarf to pinch-hit for the Cleveland Browns. Maybe baseball wasn't always so uptight.

When we arrived at the Bulls stadium, there were storm troopers at the ticket gate. In lieu of player photos, the outfield video screen ran shots of Star Wars characters—now batting, Jar Jar Binks. Between innings, Wool E. Bull, the mascot, had a lightsaber fight with Darth Vader. He lost and was escorted from the premises by the storm troopers. He later returned to speed along the warning track in a go-cart fitted with some kind of crude tinfoil lances to make it resemble a spaceship. As he drove, he hucked baseballs into the stands, launching a ball into every section except the Monster seats.

Yes, the Monster. The Bulls play in a ballpark that looks like a cross between Fenway and Camden Yards, with an early-1900s warehouse aesthetic and a 32-foot wall in left field, complete with a green manual scoreboard. The wall is blue, just to ensure you don't get disoriented after drinking too many Sam Summers and expect to walk out onto Yawkey Way. And also, probably, for legal reasons. We wouldn't want Wally the Green Monster to have to head down there and serve cease-and-desist papers to Wool E. Bull—although that scenario would make for a hilarious between-innings sketch, Wally with his lawyer and Wool E. speeding away on his go-cart.

But anyway, the baseball: It was a great game. The Bulls lost, 3-2, but there were some dramatic moments. And the game moved fast. Triple-A teams now use a 20-second pitch clock, eliminating all the farting around between pitches. By the time we dragged the kids out of the right-field playground—where you could both see the game and have a beer—it was the second inning. The whole game only took a little more than two hours. And if you appreciate baseball, the Triple-A talent level is basically indistinguishable from the majors. Just like the majors, you might see a guy hit a 95-mph fastball for a 425-foot home run. The difference is, you don't know his name, you didn't pay for parking and the guy's player photo is Yoda. Nice dinger, that was.

The beauty of minor league baseball is that nobody involved seems to take it too seriously.

To my mild surprise, the kids—ages 3 and 4—loved watching the game, to the extent that the younger one wouldn't even get up to go to the bathroom until the game was over. Afterward, he said, "That was fun." He also said, "I liked watching the golfers." Well, point is, he sat through the ninth inning, enjoying the action even when there were no Star Wars vignettes afoot. And I enjoyed the fact that there was a beer man roaming the stands hawking $1 PBRs. Minor league ball is a cheap night out.

I'm not saying that you should drop your Red Sox season tickets and spend every Friday night rooting for the New Hampshire Fisher Cats, unless you're the mom of one of the New Hampshire Fisher Cats. But if you, like me, harbored some snobbery toward the perceived second-rate nature of the minor leagues, I'd recommend you try going to a game. A seat behind the dugout at a PawSox game goes for $13. And, depending on the night, they have fireworks or might let you run the bases.

I think that for $20 they'll let you play left field. Bring your own smokes. ◆

CROSSING LINES

THE MULTI-TALENTED COMPOSER SOUNDS OFF ON DIVAS, BONNAROO AND HIS LOVE OF JONNY GREENWOOD

COMPOSER, CONDUCTOR, POET AND MUSICIAN Matthew Aucoin, 25, was raised in Medfield and lives in New York. He graduated summa cum laude from Harvard in 2012 and received a graduate diploma from Juilliard. His work has been performed by the likes of Yo-Yo Ma and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, where he currently serves as Solti Conducting Apprentice; he is also composer-in-residence at the Peabody Essex Museum in Salem. His writing has appeared in The Boston Globe (where his father, Don, is a noted theater critic), The Yale Review, The Harvard Advocate, The Colorado Review and Plain China. His third opera, Crossing—based on Walt Whitman's experiences as a nurse during the Civil War—premieres at the Citi Shubert Theatre May 29-June 6 in a production staged by the American Repertory Theater.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Composer, conductor, poet, pianist...what can't you do?
MATTHEW AUCOIN: I can't do math. Also, if I'm left alone in a room, it will become a colossal mess, even if there's nothing in it. I just wreak havoc.

So The Wall Street Journal called you "the next Leonard Bernstein." Y'know, he died a few months after I was born, so the odds of reincarnation are pretty slim.

Hardest part of composing? Finishing things. Tying a bow around it. I never have a problem wrestling with a blank page, but when it comes to saying, "Yes, this is done. Take it, world!" that's not as easy for me.

Biggest diva you've ever worked with? A soprano I worked with in Italy. First, she complained that the mansion she was being put up in wasn't grand enough for her and demanded a bigger one. Then she developed an intense sore throat and said that the only doctor she trusted was in Bratislava, so she forced the company to pay for three flights a week between Italy and Slovakia in order to treat her nonexistent sore throat. I hope I never get that bad.

Person you'd most like to collaborate with? I want to work with Jonny Greenwood of Radiohead. I consider this interview to be my public pronouncement of "Jonny Greenwood, will you go out with me?" I'd love to make music with him.

You've said you bring a jazz mindset to composing. What does that mean? It means keeping up with the pace at which music unfolds in real time. Instead of adhering to a plan and doing lots of pre-composition, I try to live in the moment and react to my own musical material the way that a jazz musician does. It also means dressing up in cool suits.

Composer you'd most welcome comparisons to? I'll tell you: not Leonard Bernstein and not Mozart. I'd be totally honored if someone thought my music sounded like Stravinsky or Berg.

"I'm cursed, or blessed, with some kind of musical/poetic synesthesia."

Do you consider yourself a polymath or a Renaissance man? It's more like I'm cursed, or blessed, with some kind of musical/poetic synesthesia. In other words, music and poetry don't feel like separate things to me. I understand that people might perceive them as very different, but for me, it all feels like one activity. To circle back to that question "Why opera?" that's kind of the answer. In opera, all these things are one thing.

How do you feel about being referred to as a prodigy? I'm probably a little too old to be a prodigy. I'm a 25-year-old adult. It's weird. Maybe compared to other composers I seem young, but I've always mistrusted the word prodigy. The point isn't to be dazzlingly good at something. The point is to make good music. If you're a little kid who can play the piano really fast, that's not the same as writing good music. So that word tends to annoy me.

Poet you most try to emulate? James Merrill, because he was addicted to puns and so am I.

Favorite music fest? Bonnaroo. I took a very grungy, sweaty road trip there with a bunch of friends in high school. I can't believe our parents let us do it. Driving to Tennessee and staying in fleabag motels. I remember this one guy we ran into who was on so many drugs that walking forward was just the most thrilling thing in the world, and he was going "Whee!" That sums up Bonnaroo.

How is working with Diane Paulus? Diane has laser vision. It's like being with this cool New Age Zen master who sees to the heart of everything. It's almost annoying how clear-sighted she is. I can wrestle with a problem in the opera for a month and then bring it to her, and she's like, "Cut those 20 bars," and boom! The scene falls into place. It's magical.

Is the Peabody Essex Museum the state's most underrated gem? Yeah. It has the disadvantage of being surrounded by witches. Witches tend to steal attention. I don't know how any art institution could compete with hangings and burnings and murders. In Salem, it's Halloween all year round. But it's definitely worth making the trek. Because it's not in the heart of Boston, they have so much space and so many resources that a smaller town can afford. It's nuts the quality of what that museum has, both in terms of the art and the programming.

Your thoughts on Boston as a music city? It's a beautiful mass of contradictions. I think there's some kind of weird recessive gene, maybe the Puritan gene, that hasn't fully embraced opera. Maybe Massholes are too rational and busy to indulge in the kind of five-hour spectacle that opera can demand. Boston's not exactly the south of Italy in terms of lifestyle. But the instrumental music scene has gotta be the best per capita in the world. If you look at the population compared to the number of orchestras, ensembles, et cetera, it's like one musician per square foot.

Top three things in heavy rotation on your iPod? My personal Billboard chart right now is the first movement of Thomas Adès' violin concerto, The Rake's Progress by Stravinsky and Les Troyens by Berlioz. So my top three hit singles would probably take about 15 hours to listen to. ◆

OUT OF THEIR SHELL

We love a good clam chowder as much as the next New Englander, but this season, local chefs are giving us excellent reasons to look beyond shellfish standbys. So we traded shrimp cocktail for shrimp ceviche tacos, clam strips for surf clam crudo, and tried a fresh twist on a classic lobster roll. Meet seven of the best new plates around town. ➳

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF

SHRIMP CEVICHE TACO

There are five types of ceviche served with chips at Loco Taqueria & Oyster Bar, but one variety is tasty enough to make it inside a taco at Southie's freshest hotspot, where it's topped with fresh-squeezed lime juice, garlic, cilantro, aji amarillo, red onions and pickled Fresno peppers. Says chef Matt Drummond: "The texture of the marinated rock shrimp and crunchy taco shell accent each other nicely, along with the bold flavors of red onion and pickled chilies." It's the only taco that Loco serves cold, a feature that's already helped make it a popular seasonal pick among diners.

HOUSEMADE CRAB TAGLIATELLE

For chef de cuisine Stephen Oxaal, crab dishes are synonymous with spring and summer dining, and Jonah crab is "the best-tasting type" in his book. He highlights that flavor profile with this dish he created for B&G Oysters—a housemade tagliatelle topped with the local crab, pearl onions, shellfish nage and ramp greens, another ingredient that gets special attention. "The arrival of ramps is worthy of celebrating," he says. "We fold them into the pasta and also add them into the dish at the very end of the cooking process, so they're barely wilted and very aromatic."

BUTTER-POACHED LOBSTER ROLL

Executive chef Richard Vellante and his team recently retooled Legal Sea Foods' long-standing best-selling entree with two new recipes. The traditional lobster roll (seen on the cover) sports a new bun—lightly buttered and toasted—lending a crunch to the tender lobster meat to make for a spot-on bread-to-shellfish ratio. As for the meat, they've selected different parts to create different textures and tastes; the tail is meatier while the claw and knuckle are sweeter. The menu has also welcomed this red-hot newcomer: a warm butter-poached version, featuring melted butter slowly infused with the lobster shells. "It takes 9 hours, but it's worth it," Vellante says. As for the great cold versus hot debate? "We'll let our guests decide."

BILLI BI "PIERRE FRANEY"

Move over, clam chowder. After reading the biographies of French chef Pierre Franey and food journalist Craig Claiborne, chef Michael Serpa was inspired to create a classic billi bi, a rich mussel soup said to take its name from tinplate tycoon William B. Leeds, a devotee of a version served a century ago at the legendary Paris bistro Maxim's, and later popularized in the States by Franey and Claiborne. Combining PEI mussels, leeks, egg yolk and chives, the result is now a standout on the menu at SELECT Oyster Bar, where Serpa suggests pairing it with a glass of crisp Chablis. "I think the soup is a bit more direct than a chowder, where the clams often get overpowered by cream, bacon, et cetera," he explains. "The billi bi is all about the mussels and everything else is in the background."

BAKED OYSTERS

Don't get Island Creek Oyster Bar chef de cuisine Nicki Hobson wrong: She loves raw oysters, but it's nice to change it up a bit. Her current crush is on the baked oysters, each one served over leeks, sprinkled with chorizo, topped with a spoonful of hollandaise on the lip of the shell and garnished with chives. "Because the oyster is only cooked until it's warm, it still carries a very fresh, open ocean quality. You then get the brininess of the oyster and saltiness of the chorizo," Hobson says. "The melted leeks and hollandaise bring a nice silky, creamy texture to round it all out."

SCITUATE SCALLOP WITH BARTLETT PEAR + POPPY SEEDS

Loyal Nine's menu taps oft-overlooked seafood picks, like blood clams and knobby conch. And while the Scituate scallop may sound familiar, this preparation is unusually lively. "Oysters are always eaten live; clams are frequently eaten on the half shell," says executive chef Marc Sheehan. "So why not scallops?" The raw texture is firmer, the taste cleaner. Accompaniments change with the season, and here Sheehan preserves Bartlett pears in hard cider infused with peels and cores, black pepper, lemon thyme and ginger, pureeing the fruit's flesh with lemon juice and brown butter. For textural contrast, there are poppy seeds, housemade sea salt and—adding a subtle floral note—diced basil. Of the pear-based vinaigrette with confit leek oil, Sheehan adds, "There have been many nights on the pass when, after getting sauced with the vinaigrette, a few of the scallops have danced in the shell."

LOCAL SURF CLAM CRUDO

Sometimes coming up with a truly excellent new dish takes teamwork. Ostra executive chef Mitchell Randall says that he and sous-chef Cameron Cieslak often go to the fish pier for inspiration. That's where they came across the New Bedford bivalves used in Ostra's local surf clam crudo, a fresh treatment for big clams that often get chopped up for chowder or clam strips. Served with shiitake mushrooms, cucumber, radish and soy caviar, it's a dish layered with different flavors. "The clam is very sweet," Randall says. "There's the earthy mushroom, the crisp texture from the cucumber and radish...and the soy adds salt to the dish." The inspiration for the soy caviar came from Ostra's pastry chef, Jennifer Luna, who'd recently been creating gelatin-infused fruit pearls for some of her desserts. "We thought it would be a cool play on caviar for a crudo dish," explains Randall, who draws on fond memories of growing up on seafood on the Maine coast. "Nothing beats a shellfish dinner with family and friends."

SEIZE the SUMMER

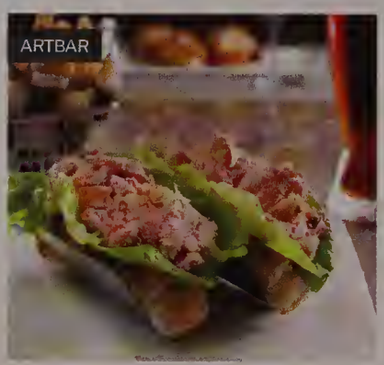
Celebrate the season with these spectacular dining events

BY LINH TRAN BRINCAT

Maybe it was the historically heinous winter—the crushing effect of being surrounded by sidewalk igloos and mountain-sized snow farms. Or maybe the local dining scene just wants to glory in the agricultural abundance of this time of year. Whatever the reason, there's definitely something in the air this summer—a carpe diem, enjoy-every-moment-because-this-weather-might-not-last exhilaration reflected in the diversity of dining events. From seafood pop-ups to Tiki classes and al fresco farm dining, make this summer the only season to remember.



SEAFOOD FEASTS

Island Creek Oyster Festival

A staggering 60,000 oysters will be served on the half shell at the Island Creek Oyster Festival, but this bivalve benefit is about much more than its juicy, briny namesakes. Started in 2008 on Duxbury Beach, the bash raised more than half a million to support sustainable aquaculture projects in Haiti and Zanzibar, among other nonprofit efforts, but went on hiatus four years ago. Now it's back in a new home: the Lawn on D in Fort Point next to the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center. On Sept. 19 from 3:30 to 8:30 p.m., 3,000 people will flock to stations manned by 35 chefs from across the country on the sprawling green space dotted with interactive sculptures, like illuminated swings that change colors as they sway—a very different setting from the dunes of Duxbury Beach. Island Creek Oysters president Chris Sherman says his challenge is to adapt "the Island Creek brand, which is associated with the beach and Duxbury, to an urban experience." To that end, he's partnering with food trucks, bringing in three live bands and talking with the ICA about potential arts happenings, so attendees will have plenty to do between bites. Tickets for the summer sendoff go on sale on July 1—and given the popularity of past installments and the newsmaking return, this culinary Coachella could sell out quick.

Rather throw your own bivalve bash at home? You can buy oysters at many local markets or order packs of 50, 100 or 200 fresh from Island Creek. Once you've (carefully!) shucked those suckers, try topping them off with this recipe from Island Creek Oyster Bar chef/owner Jeremy Sewall.

Cilantro Mignonette

- 1/2 cup rice wine vinegar
- 1/2 cup white wine
- 2 teaspoons finely diced Fresno peppers
- 1 tablespoon minced cilantro

Rosebud's BBQ 101

Everything tastes better grilled, but your friends will out you as a charcoal charlatan if you don't know your fundamentals. Chef/partner John Delpha of Davis Square's Rosebud American Kitchen & Bar—a multi-year award winner at the Jack Daniel's BBQ Competition in Lynchburg, Tennessee—will help you grill like a pro, talking you through everything from fire management and marinades to the history of BBQ and its relation to direct and indirect grilling. He says the BBQ 101 class will focus on "stuff people can make themselves at home," like grilled pizza and the diner's own lamb shoulder steak, which he marinates overnight in olive oil, lemon zest, parsley and black pepper and serves with grilled asparagus and a chipotle chimichurri. And since the diner car restaurant boasts a thriving drink program, Delpha will also include a lesson in mixing up a blackberry bourbon smash. Alas, although the patio accommodates 30 people, the July 18 class is capped at 15 cookout connoisseurs—but if you're not one of them, you can still try out one of the recipes at home.

Grilled Lamb Shoulder Steak with Chipotle Chimichurri

- Lemon zest
- Garlic
- Parsley
- Oil
- Black pepper
- Lamb shoulder steak

For the chimichurri

- 1 cup chopped flat-leaf parsley
- 1/2 cup extra-virgin olive oil
- 1/4 cup red wine vinegar
- 2 tablespoons chopped fresh oregano
- 2 tablespoons chipotle in adobo
- 1 tablespoon smoked paprika
- 1/2 teaspoon red chili flakes
- 3 garlic cloves
- 1/2 grated medium Spanish onion
- 1 minced jalapeno
- Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste

- Marinate the lamb in lemon zest, garlic, parsley, oil and black pepper overnight. Remove the lamb from the fridge 1 hour before cooking. Season with salt and pepper.

- For the chimichurri sauce, place all but the last three ingredients in a food processor and process for 1 minute. Move the mixture into a bowl and add remaining ingredients. This yields approximately one pint.

- Place the lamb over a hot fire on the grill and turn several times to get a good sear. Remove the lamb from the grill once its internal temperature reaches 130 degrees. Let the meat rest for 5 minutes, apply chimichurri sauce and serve.

DOWN ON THE FARM

The Blue Room & Bay End Farm Dinners

The relationship between Cape Cod's Bay End Farm and Cambridge restaurant the Blue Room has deep roots: The organic farm's husband-and-wife owners, Kofi and Erin Ingersoll, worked under restaurateur Nick Zappia at the Blue Room more than 15 years ago, and the restaurant was among the first to use their produce. And what started seven years ago as a benefit to help the Ingersolls build a barn and canning kitchen has grown into an annual tradition of summer get-togethers by the bucolic Bourne farm's oak trees. On July 26, Aug. 16 and Sept. 20, they'll team up once again for prix fixe four-course family-style dinners paired with organic wines from Central Bottle, the wine shop Zappia co-owns in Cambridge. The dinners are capped at 80 people, and since many are repeat guests, Zappia and his team try to change the offerings yearly—in fact, the actual menu isn't determined until the week of the event, to better take advantage of what's being harvested that week. For the Ingersolls, that may mean seven kinds of heirloom tomatoes, small leafy blond cucumbers, onions, radishes, greens, fingerling potatoes and carrots. Anything they don't grow, like corn and fruit, they trade for with neighbors. For the July dinner, Zappia says, the produce will probably be "oniony, herby, greeny, which would pair with local striped bass, clams from Wellfleet or mussels from Duxbury." FYI: Children are welcome at the event, and if there are enough of them, Zappia's crew has been known to set up a separate table so their parents can enjoy a leisurely meal while the kids graze.

Can't make the class? Isaza shared the recipe so you can have a Lady About Town in your living room.

Lady About Town

- 1 1/2 ounces Old Monk Rum
- 1 1/2 ounces Aperol
- 1/2 ounce Cocchi Vermouth di Torino
- 1/2 ounce orange shrub

To make the shrub, cut two oranges into wedges and combine them with 1 quart white sugar, 10 cloves and 6 star anises and let the mix sit for at least 48 hours in a dark, cool, dry area. Once you have a paste-like consistency, add 8 ounces of apple cider vinegar. After the sugar has completely dissolved, strain through a mesh strainer, and you'll have an orange shrub with a five- to six-month shelf life. Combine with the other ingredients and serve over ice in a highball glass. Garnish with a float of Peychaud's bitters and a fresh mint leaf.

West Bridge's Tiki Class

Mauricio "Moe" Isaza, bar manager at West Bridge, talks about cocktails the way chef/owner Matthew Gaudet speaks about food—with a tone of authority and a sense of awe that come from both having studied the subject and remaining fascinated by its possibilities. Isaza will share his knowledge of Tiki drinks with 35 attendees on Aug. 8 at the Kendall Square restaurant's outdoor bar, discussing the origins of the iconic mug and tales from Trader Vic's while mixing three cocktails to illustrate Tiki's evolution. Two will be classics, but he'll save an original—"a modern take on Tiki flavors with a pre-Prohibition slant"—for last. Called the Lady About Town, Isaza's spin on a rum-based Negroni blends 7-year-old Old Monk Rum, Aperol, Cocchi Vermouth di Torino and orange shrub, a fruit syrup with vinegar and warm spices. Given the short shelf life of fresh-squeezed orange juice and the challenge of stocking it at the bar, Isaza tried preserving it in various ways, finally developing a shrub "that put the flavor of fresh-squeezed in a time capsule so it doesn't go away." The result is a refreshing drink with a balance of bitter, sweet and spice from the star anise and cloves in the shrub—which pairs perfectly with West Bridge's sake- and soy-glazed BBQ.

WHAT HAPPENS when you put some of this town's hottest artistic and culinary talents in a room, add a splash of booze and offer a blank canvas? Collaborative awesomeness. That's the idea behind CREATE, the brainchild of Tavern Road's chef Louis DiBiccari, which pairs toques and bartenders with artists and musicians, each tasked with creating something inspired by a shared theme. This year's edition features a killer lineup of chefs from Island Creek Oyster Bar, Cafe ArtScience, Puritan & Company, Mei Mei, Asta and Sam's, artists like rapper Moe Pope and painter Kenji Nakayama, and bar talent from Sarma, Audubon and more. Palettes meet palates on June 7 at the Battery Wharf Hotel. / Alexandra Cavallo

CREATE runs from 2 to 5 pm on June 7 at the Battery Wharf Hotel, 3 Battery Wharf Park, Boston. $45. create-boston.com.

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

BOOK CASE Ordinary people are sometimes capable of extraordinary acts of cruelty. That's the premise behind after all the terrible things I do, a drama from playwright A. Rey Pamatmat inspired in part by anti-bullying initiatives, whose focus on victims left him wondering about the lives of the bullies. Staged by the Huntington Theatre Company, this New England premiere production follows Daniel, a gay aspiring writer who returns to his small Midwestern hometown after college and takes a job in the bookstore he loved as a child. There, he and the shop's Filipina immigrant owner, Linda, realize they share a fraught past—and far more in common than appearances would suggest. The drama unfolds through June 21 at the Calderwood Pavilion at the BCA. / Alexandra Cavallo

DUDE, WHERE'S MY RUG?

A story of bowling buddies, a case of mistaken identity and a ruined rug, The Big Lebowski was an instant hit with stoners upon its 1998 release, though it received more mixed reviews from critics. But the Coen brothers' intentionally convoluted crime comedy has aged well, amassing a cult following of Dudes with its many meme-ready one-liners and even earning a spot in the National Film Registry last year. Catch Jeff Bridges as a slacker icon when the '90s classic screens as part of the Brattle Theatre's Sunshine Noir series on June 6. / Andrew Bourque

Reviews by Brett Michel

The Age of Adaline ★★1/2 Owing a debt to both The Curious Case of Benjamin Button and The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford, Lee Toland Krieger's nutty confection plays like a literary adaptation, down to the narration provided by Hugh Ross, who performed this same vocal duty in the 2007 Western. However, this film's original fiction has less in common with the writing of F. Scott Fitzgerald and Ron Hansen than it does the cheese-filled weepies of Nicholas Sparks. Little surprise, since this picture's co-writer J. Mills Goodloe previously helped adapt Sparks' The Best of Me. Blake Lively plays Adaline Bowman, a 107-year-old beauty who hasn't added a single wrinkle since a 1937 accident froze her in the body of a 29-year-old. Fearing her secret might turn her into a guinea pig, Adaline has lived a largely solitary life, avoiding romantic entanglements. Alas, this unique cougar falls for the philanthropic Ellis Jones (Michael Huisman), setting her toward an unexpected reunion with a man she jilted in the '60s (Anthony Ingruber), who looked and sounded like a young Harrison Ford; he's affectingly played in the present by, well, Harrison Ford. Sweetly idiotic. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Avengers: Age of Ultron ★★ Writer/director Joss Whedon's sequel to his 2012 blockbuster, The Avengers, opens with a well-choreographed sequence highlighting the superhero team's effectiveness. Unfortunately, this isn't matched by the choppy, quick-cut CGI destruction that follows once Tony Stark—the man inside Iron Man—accidentally creates the Avengers' robotic nemesis, Ultron (voiced by a deliciously arch James Spader), who takes on a bit of his dad's ironic sensibilities, quipping so much that his menace is hampered. In fact, much of Whedon's patented banter falls flat, dampening the fun that was so present in the previous picture. Hawkeye, aka Clint Barton, who spent much of the first adventure as a mind-controlled zombie, becomes the most fully formed character, and Natasha Romanoff/Black Widow receives both backstory and an ill-advised romance with Bruce Banner—who transforms into the green-skinned Hulk when his blood pressure rises—while Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr.), Captain America (Chris Evans) and Thor (Chris Hemsworth) have less to do when hurling one-liners at one another. But it's Linda Cardellini, who appears as Barton's civilian wife, that gets perhaps the best line: "You know I totally support your Avenging." So do we. But for how long? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Clouds of Sils Maria ★★★1/2 You may not know his name, but know this: Olivier Assayas is one of our greatest living directors. The 60-year-old Frenchman continues to build upon an amazing filmography seen by few in the U.S. with his latest, a challenging drama about acting that comments on celebrity, gossip culture and young, overprivileged starlets. Talky to a fault, it features spectacular acting turns by Oscar winner Juliette Binoche as Maria Enders, an aging actress just past the peak of her international career, and Kristen Stewart as her personal assistant, Valentine. That's right, Twilight's mopey brunette is one of the film's many sly delights, offering a meta-commentary on her own persona in a production that recalls Bergman's chamber dramas, more specifically—and fittingly—Persona. Don't laugh: Stewart became the first American to ever win a Best Actress César (France's Oscar) with this performance, which builds upon her recent criminally unheralded work in Still Alice and the little-seen Camp X-Ray. But this is Binoche's show. As Maria's relationship with Valentine increasingly echoes that of the leads in the play she's rehearsing, Assayas comments no longer, allowing us to interpret his masterfully ambiguous ending. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Ex Machina ★★1/2 Many viewers of this science fiction thriller, the directing debut of Alex Garland, writer of Danny Boyle's 28 Days Later and Sunshine, will mispronounce the title of this movie, oblivious to its origins. This is probably for the best, since Garland's script isn't nearly as smart as he seems to think it is. Ostensibly, this is a film about the most advanced artificial intelligence ever created. Too bad writer/director Spike Jonze explored this concept far more effectively two years ago with his Oscar-winning script for Her, which featured a man falling in love with the operating system in his cellphone. That OS was voiced by an unseen Scarlett Johansson, while here, the AI is visibly embodied by Alicia Vikander as Ava. Caleb Smith (Domhnall Gleeson), a programmer at an Internet-search giant, has been brought to the private mountain estate of the company's brilliant CEO, billionaire recluse Nathan Bateman (Oscar Isaac), to evaluate Ava's human qualities, but is there more going on here? Sadly, yes, and the mystifying conclusion leaves you yearning for the halcyon days of murderous AI like 2001's HAL. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Far from the Madding Crowd ★★ Director Thomas Vinterberg has mounted a handsome adaptation of Thomas Hardy's mid-19th-century-set literary classic that's completely superfluous in the face of John Schlesinger's nearly three-hour 1967 version that's superior in every way. Although the Dane has filled his update with strong actors—Carey Mulligan as the self-willed Bathsheba Everdene and Matthias Schoenaerts, Michael Sheen and Tom Sturridge as her three wildly different suitors—they come across as children compared to the earlier cast, which featured British legends Julie Christie, Alan Bates, Peter Finch and Terence Stamp projecting far more palpable longing in the same roles, working from a script by Frederic Raphael that took its time establishing an air of violence that threatened to overtake the sweeping romance at any moment. Vinterberg's picture runs a hair under two hours with a script courtesy of David Nicholls (screenwriter of 2011's romantic drama One Day and author of the novel it's based on). The heat-lacking results play like Cliffs-Notes as composer Craig Armstrong's score lays the piano and violin strings on thick, overcompensating for the sexual chemistry that was presumably left on the cutting room floor, far from the screen. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and West Newton.)

Furious 7 ★★★ Before the title has even appeared in the seventh installment of The Fast and the Furious franchise, Jason Statham's Deckard Shaw has single-handedly destroyed much of a London hospital in his quest for vengeance against the people responsible for gravely injuring his little brother, Fast & Furious 6's baddie. His targets? The close-knit team of Dominic Toretto (Vin Diesel), who's first seen involving himself in a "Race War," which is more innocent than it sounds (this isn't Get Hard, people). Returning for one final ride is the late Paul Walker as Brian O'Conner. Walker, who died in an unrelated car wreck during production, is nevertheless introduced behind the wheel...of a minivan. Brian's now a dedicated dad, fitting with the series' sentimental focus on "family." Watching his son hurl toy cars, he tells the boy, "Cars don't fly." Except when they do. Whether dropped from planes, jumping off mountains or driven between two skyscrapers, Furious 7's exotic vehicles spend much of their time airborne. Switching lanes from horror to action, director James Wan (Saw, Insidious and The Conjuring) gets up to speed quickly, hardly letting off the gas as he steers Walker toward a graceful ride into the sunset. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hot Pursuit ★ The montage that opens the new comedy directed by Anne Fletcher (The Proposal) shows Rose Cooper, a police officer's daughter (played in rapid succession by Maggie Hance, Abigail James Witherspoon and Harley Graham), growing up in the back seat of a squad car—her dad even drives her and a terrified date to their high school prom. Inevitably, she becomes a cop herself, played as an adult by Reese Witherspoon, who produced the film with her co-star, Sofía Vergara. You begin to wonder if Officer Cooper ever had a life outside of the cop car though, since she's a glorified idiot who doesn't know how to interact with human beings, and certainly not with Daniella Riva (Vergara), the saucy wife of a drug boss she's been assigned to protect as they snake their way across Texas, pursued by crooked police and murderous hitmen. Frustrated in their search for good comic roles, the two actresses commissioned this script by David Feeney and John Quaintance, proving that it's just as easy to make terribly predictable, unfunny comedies when you're in charge of the production. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

I'll See You in My Dreams ★★★ Blythe Danner shines in this comic drama directed by Brett Haley. She plays Carol, a retired schoolteacher and former singer in her 70s who's been widowed for 20 years. Her tranquil routine of playing cards with close friends (nice turns by Rhea Perlman, Mary Kay Place and June Squibb), tending to her garden and (especially) relaxing with a glass of wine is disrupted when her beloved dog dies. All alone in her spacious LA home, she finds loneliness creeping into that routine, until two new men enter her life: Lloyd (Martin Starr), the 30-something pool man who begins sharing that wine with her, and Bill, the gravelly-voiced old cowboy (played by Sam Elliott, naturally) who begins wooing Carol, who hasn't dated since her husband's death. The script, courtesy of Haley and Marc Basch, avoids veering into cliche, and Danner exhibits an easy rapport with the ensemble that belies the compressed shooting schedule on this charming independent production. Some tears are shed, but Danner's transcendent turn behind the mic at a karaoke bar keeps the movie singing. A nice, small-scale alternative to blockbuster fatigue. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Mad Max: Fury Road ★★★1/2 Max Rockatansky returns, madder than ever, but more hardened. He's a changed man, played by Tom Hardy, filling the boots previously worn by Mel Gibson in filmmaker George Miller's first three Mad Max pictures. In hindsight, the climactic 14-minute chase sequence in 1982's The Road Warrior served as a test run for Mad Max: Fury Road, which the 70-year-old Miller has distilled into a single two-hour chase. This is pure cinema, and it shames the work of directors half Miller's age. When Max is captured by brutal warlord Immortan Joe (Hugh Keays-Byrne), he becomes a "blood bag" for Nux (Nicholas Hoult), a cancer-ridden "War Boy" who requires transfusions. Meanwhile, Imperator Furiosa (Charlize Theron), one of Joe's lieutenants, has secretly liberated his five wives in her War Rig. A small army of Joe's War Boys gives pursuit, and Max, chained to the front of Nux's hot rod, is along for the ride. Vehicular mayhem ensues and Max escapes, teaming up with Furiosa, his fate now bound to hers. As the armies of more warlords converge, the earlier films' battles for oil and gas are replaced by a fight for something more precious: human life. A masterpiece of motion. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect 2 ★★ Like another of this year's sequels, The Second Best Exotic Marigold Hotel, this encore to Pitch Perfect reunites characters from a beloved film based on a novel—and the results are just as out of tune. Without a strong foundation for her screenplay, returning writer Kay Cannon takes Mickey Rapkin's characters, the Barden Bellas—Beca (Anna Kendrick), Fat Amy (Rebel Wilson), Chloe (Brittany Snow), et al.—adds a legacy member (Hailee Steinfeld) and a Hispanic stereotype (Chrissie Fit) to their ranks, and then fails to give them anything new to do. Instead, she has the Bellas open the movie with a birthday performance for the president, then proceeds to humiliate them after a wardrobe malfunction exposes Fat Amy's vagina to the Obamas. Really. In order to restore their good name and standing before they all graduate, the a cappella group must win an international competition in Copenhagen. Elizabeth Banks and John Michael Higgins also return as a pair of racist, homophobic competition commentators, with Banks pulling double-duty in her directorial debut. Alas, the Pittsfield native can't quite keep this from becoming caca-pella. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Poltergeist ★1/2 Tobe Hooper and Steven Spielberg's 1982 horror classic Poltergeist expertly tapped into the zeitgeist of its time, capitalizing on the television's central place in the American family's home—and transforming TV's post-national anthem signoff static into an iconic source of dread in the process. More than 30 years later, cable and satellite broadcast hundreds of channels—but in an age of digital devices, it seems like no one is really watching anymore. So, it's apt that this remake from producer Sam Raimi (The Evil Dead) and director Gil Kenan (Monster House) still utilizes TV as a central gimmick, since few will care about this film when the superior original exists. The script by Boston playwright David Lindsay-Abaire eschews providing any normalcy as build-up to the strange goings-on; bizarre occurrences begin as soon as the Bowen family (not the Freelings) moves into a foreclosed home in a crummy Illinois neighborhood, despite the fact that dad Eric (Sam Rockwell) is unemployed and his credit cards don't work. And while young Kennedi Clements does reprise Heather O'Rourke's iconic "They're here!" line, her delivery's as lacking as the rest of this update. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Results ★★★ Danny (Kevin Corrigan) is a recently divorced, newly rich New Yorker who's transplanted himself to Austin, Texas. Alone in his mansion and out of shape with nothing to do, the "weirdo" visits local gym Power 4 Life. There, he informs the owner and self-styled guru Trevor (Guy Pearce) that his interests begin and end with "learning how to take a punch." He may need to by the end of this shaggy, incisive and not wholly predictable romantic comedy from former Bostonian and Austin transplant Andrew Bujalski. If you've seen any of his earlier films, from 2002's Funny Ha Ha to 2013's Computer Chess, then you probably realize that labeling this a "rom-com" is slightly disingenuous. Nevertheless, a triangle forms in this look at the relationship between money and happiness when intense and acerbic trainer Kat (Cobie Smulders) comes between the two men. This is the biggest-name cast Bujalski's assembled, but they fit comfortably into his peculiar rhythms, freeing them to do some deceptively sly and charming work. (At Kendall Square.)

While We're Young ★★★ Noah Baumbach's eighth film as a writer/director opens with some pointed onscreen quotes from Henrik Ibsen's The Master Builder, establishing the animosity those in middle age exhibit toward the younger generation. Documentary filmmaker Josh (Ben Stiller, star of Baumbach's acerbic 2010 film Greenberg) and his wife/producer Cornelia (Naomi Watts) are a middle-aged couple who open their door to nascent documentarian Jamie (Adam Driver, from Baumbach's last film, 2012's Frances Ha) and ice cream maker Darby (Amanda Seyfried), a much younger couple who crash Josh's continuing-education class. Subtly humorous, naturalistic dialogue lifts Baumbach's best pictures past many of his contemporaries', but it's when he gets bogged down in plot machinations that his movies can sometimes suffer—and there's a surfeit of plot here. Duplicities pile up, as do resentments, but this film isn't Greenberg. The honesty can still be bitter at times, but there's a newfound sweetness that's crept into Baumbach's last two pictures. With the passage of time comes the realization that the cruelty of life doesn't have to sting so hard when tempered with the love of a partner. That, and a good bottle of Scotch to share. (At Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Woman in Gold ★★ While the titular Gustav Klimt painting, referred to as "the Mona Lisa of Austria," is a masterpiece, director Simon Curtis' film about an octogenarian woman's fight to reclaim the famous portrait of her aunt is anything but. The maudlin script by first-time screenwriter Alexi Kaye Campbell doesn't do any favors for Helen Mirren or Ryan Reynolds, the wildly mismatched actors who portray the elderly Jewish woman, Maria Altmann, and her inexperienced young lawyer, Randy Schoenberg, as they fight the Austrian establishment to reclaim the artwork that Nazis stole from her Viennese family. A flashback structure finds Altmann portrayed in her younger years by a surprisingly credible Mirren stand-in, Orphan Black star Tatiana Maslany, but her flight to America alongside her husband (Max Irons) is presented in a hackneyed thriller fashion that cheapens the power of the story, which isn't helped by the paint-by-numbers screenplay that puts as much emphasis on Schoenberg's family as it does Altmann's. True, his grandfather was a famed Austrian composer whose family also fled the Nazis, but Schoenberg's domestic and workplace dramas have little of the resonance of Altmann's larger story. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

NO SLEEP TILL BOSTON

In today's ever-changing EDM scene, ODESZA consistently stands out, thanks to a dreamlike sound and collaborations with the likes of Sia, Pretty Lights and Charli XCX. The Seattle duo first made waves on the underground electronica circuit in 2012, when college pals Harrison Mills and Clayton Knight (aka CatacombKid and BeachesBeaches) broke out with their debut album, Summer's Gone. They've since launched a mixtape and party series, NO.SLEEP, and released sophomore effort In Return, which debuted in September at No. 1 on the Billboard electronic chart. Catch them on their first headlining tour, which stops by the House of Blues on June 3. / Andrew Bourque

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

STREET CRED Long before Bill Cunningham and his unmistakable blue jacket took Manhattan by storm, street photographers were documenting city life from Detroit to New Orleans to Chicago. On the Scene: 20th Century Street Photography explores how growing metropolises and compact cameras opened new views for artists, showcasing the work of early American pioneers such as Walker Evans and Garry Winograd. The exhibit includes everyday scenes such as Running Legs (pictured), Lisette Model's 1940 snap of busy Wall Street workers, and more singular ones, including Stanley Forman's Pulitzer Prize-winning image of a 1976 Boston City Hall Plaza anti-busing demonstration. Catch all the city slickers at Andover's Addison Gallery of American Art through July 31. / Sarah Hagman

The IMPROPER On the Town!

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mo-

saic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Something's always brewing at Best of Boston's award winning beer bar. KNOW THYSELF

It takes a village, which is why teens aging out of foster care thrive with help from Youth Villages. The charity held a Spring Celebration at the Fairmont Copley Plaza, where giant origami poppies gave the cocktail hour a trippy vibe. Dinner followed in the beautifully bedecked ballroom, where one could rub elbows with honoree Gerald Chertavian, blond bombshell Yvette Mulderry and her dashing husband, Peter, fashion plate Jessica Lutzker, yummy mummy Tamar Frieze, handsome devil Jess Williams, brunette Bond girls Margaret McNeill and Pramy Yadav, and one woman who won the recycling prize by admitting, "I wore this dress to my sister's bat mitzvah 16 years ago."

"What a diverse group," said one lifelong Bostonian. "I just met someone from the Midwest!"

However, the evening's best exchange was this: "Who invited you?"

"You mean who didn't disinvite me?"

BETTER LIVING THROUGH CHEMISTRY

The only thing missing was a hole in the middle when Community Servings hosted its LifeSavor gala, the annual everyone-who's-anyone affair that started with a massive cocktail reception at the Langham Hotel and continued with dinner parties at restaurants throughout the city.

Present and accounted for: board chair Karen Bressler and the hunky Scott Epstein, the uber-stylish Joyce Linde, B-52s frontman Fred Schneider, gajillionaire Ron Ansin, the scorchingly sexy Brendon Pires, punk-rock royalty Oedipus and his gorgeous consort, Amy Hyson, incorrigible scamp Nunzio Bellofatto, Our Lady of Armani Terri Davis, food scribe Corby Kummer, broadcasting behemoth Henry Santoro, the achingly lovely Michaela Larson, blond balabusta Annie Copps and a woman who replied to the compliment "You look fabulous" by saying, "I don't have any choice."

However, the evening's best exchange came when one guest admiringly said to a friend, "I don't know how you do everything you do," to which the friend replied, "One word: Adderall."

SNAIL TRAIL'S A GOOD NAME FOR A RACEHORSE

The 141st Kentucky Derby might've taken place in Louisville, but Boston served up its share of mint juleps and picture hats at the Run for the Roses fundraiser to benefit Milton's Blue Hill Observatory, the oldest weather observatory in the country.

Held at Leather District hotspot Bel Ari, the raucous afternoon to celebrate what one guest described as "the Twitter of sporting events" attracted the likes of extreme weather babe Bonnie Schneider, WBZ dreamboat Eric Fisher, the dapper Edward Naczi with his gorgeous other half, Melanie Wernick, blond bombshell Adrienne Camire, observatory head honcho Charles Orloff, financial services titan Paul Harkins and his son, William (who won the hat contest's men's division), and one woman who pointed at the roast suckling pig and said, "Gross," to which someone jokingly responded, "We thought we'd do that instead of horse."

Taken out of context, the afternoon's raciest comment came from the man who kept spilling his mint julep and said, "I try to leave a sticky mess wherever I go."

LA CAGE AUX FOLLES TIMES TEN

You know it's a good party when the fire department shows up even before the food is served. Drag Brunch, the hilariously madcap fundraiser for the Boston Living Center, got off to a rousing start with firemen that a few guests mistook for male strippers, continuing with plenty of food, booze and amazing performances.

Hosted at Club Cafe by the incomparable Verna Turbulence, the afternoon attracted a motley crew that included ice skating royalty Elin Gardiner Schran, design guru Mark Bombara, fashion icon Yolanda Cellucci and her scrumptious daughter, Linda Petrosian, redheaded sex bomb Eugene Weitz, talk show host Bianca de la Garza, style maven Elisha Daniels and the snacky Doug, designers Denise Hajjar and David Josef, and so on and so forth.

The act that stole the show was Ms. Kris Knievil's rendition of "Let It Go," cleverly punctuated by fart noises, but without a doubt the most unexpected remark—especially because it was true—came from the ordained priest who said, "Well, this was fun, but I have to go perform afternoon mass." ◆

RAISING THE MERCURY

IF YOU HAVEN'T TOTALLY BLOCKED OUT memories of high school English class, you may recall Quincy native John Cheever's story "The Swimmer," in which the protagonist decides to make his way home one summer Sunday by swimming through his neighbors' pools, one by one, crawling through sapphire-colored waters surrounded by gin-sipping suburbanites. Spoiler alert: Things get weird.

For our Summer Style issue, we had the intrepid Jonathan Soroff swim across town with happier results, taking a lap in six local pools and reporting back on the various social scenes. As for what to wear poolside, Lydia Santangelo has us covered with a fashion spread of chic swimwear featuring retro cuts in bright and pastel palettes. And there are lots of other fun style finds in this issue: Matt Martinelli puts Converse's custom sneaker bar to the test, Alayna Eberhart rounds up some sunny shirtdresses and Renata Certo-Ware catches up with the local designer behind some very grownup backpacks. Meanwhile, Soroff chats up our cover subject, Katie Nolan, the hilarious host of the Fox Sports 1 comedy/sports show Garbage Time, who proves that a wicked sense of humor is always in fashion.

HOLLY RIKE

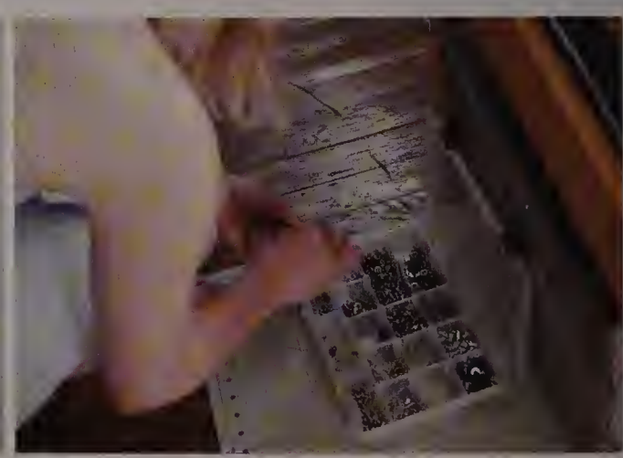
PACK MENTALITY: Each Wolfepack is handmade by Gina DeWolfe.

The Year of DeWolfe

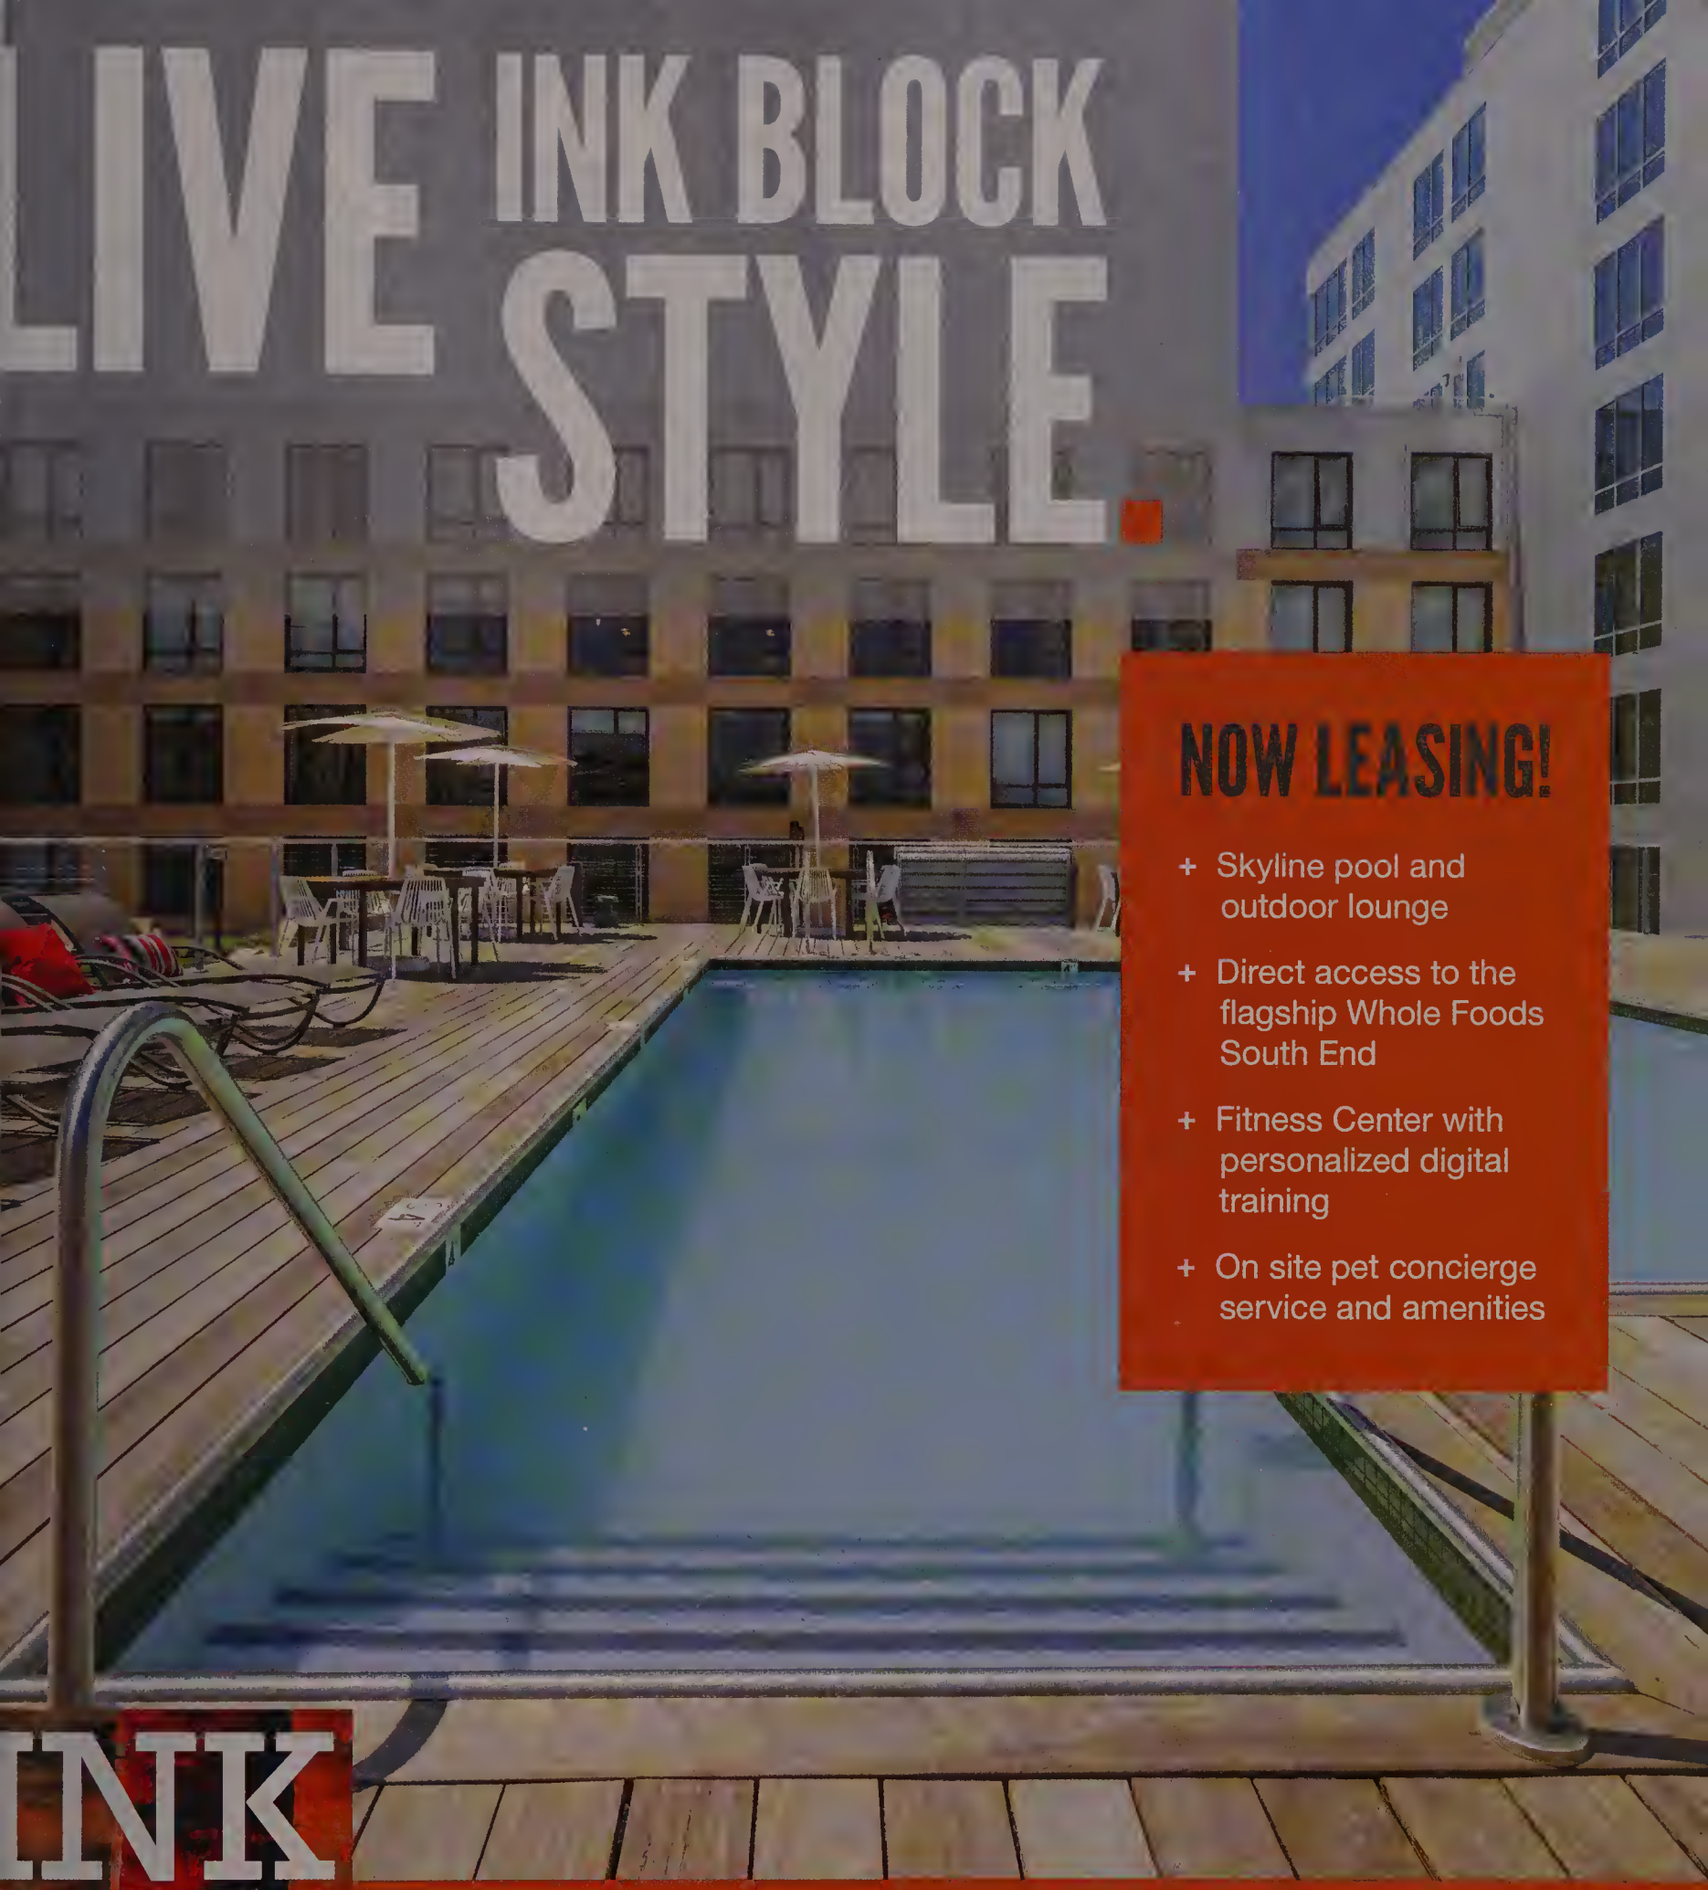
She's been designing for nearly a decade, but with her clean-lined leather backpacks—dubbed "Wolfepacks"—cropping up around town and a recent nod from InStyle, 2015 is shaping up to be Gina DeWolfe's year.

The Massachusetts native, who grew up on a farm in Boylston, was in high school when she made her first bag, a fabric tote. She was carrying it on a shopping trip in Boston when Bodega owner Oliver Mak spotted it; within two weeks, she had a collection in the store—before she even had a driver's license. The bags were a hit, and DeWolfe relished the creative process, a heady mix of problem-solving and artistry. Two years later, she enrolled at Newbury Street's School of Fashion Design, expanding her repertoire to clothing.

But after contracting Lyme disease in 2011, DeWolfe found herself bedridden—and desperate for an outlet. When life gave her Lyme, DeWolfe made bags. "There were lots of dark days," she recalls. "I'm a creative person by nature and needed something to keep myself busy." Hand-sewing filled the time, and soon DeWolfe began experimenting with leather, turning to tools she had inherited from her grandfather, a leathersmith. She found that leather has a malleability that most fabric lacks, much like a hunk of clay. Each piece also has a history, one that DeWolfe appreciates. "It's organic, it comes from a living being, and I try to honor that and respect where the hide came from."



WHAT'S IN HER WOLFEPACK?
"Two envelope wallets from my collection—one for business cards, one for cash. My favorite Ray-Bans, a Moleskin planner, a chunk of amethyst for positive energy (I also keep one on my work bench) and a little bottle of patchouli oil."



DeWolfe made an early prototype for herself and spent the better part of a year reworking that design. "It takes a lot of effort to make something so effortless," she admits. Karmaloop bought her first large order, which she tackled on her own, from admin to production. Today, the 20-something designer still makes each Wolfepack by hand, and her deWolfe line (which includes wallets, belts and other bags) has grown almost entirely through word of mouth. Having mentors like Lana Barakat, owner of December Thieves and an early supporter, hasn't hurt. She picked up the line last winter. And this spring, the Wolfepack made it to the finals in InStyle's reader-voted Independent Handbag Designer Awards, placing in the "Handmade" category alongside four other international designers.

When she's not working in her studio, you can find DeWolfe in front of a classroom at Bay State College, where she teaches everything from Tailoring and French Draping to Pattern Making and the History of Couture. But she's always tinkering. Keep an eye on ginadewolfe.com for a new iteration of the Wolfepack, which will be bigger, slightly more rugged, made of a thicker leather and decidedly unisex. "A lot of guys have bought the original Wolfepack, while women might want a larger one, too," DeWolfe explains. "I want the brand to be androgynous." / Renata Certo-Ware

THE GALLOWS GROUP EXPANDS ITS SOUTH END ROOTS.

BANYAN BAR + REFUGE
553 Tremont St., Boston

Gallows Group owner Rebecca Roth Gullo wanted to expand her business one project at a time—but Banyan represented an opportunity she simply couldn't resist. She could take over the former home of Hamersley's Bistro, a large and beloved space that served as a culinary beacon for the South End for years. And she could hire East by Northeast chef/owner Phillip Tang to lead the kitchen. The only hitch was that the chance came soon after she committed to opening Blackbird Doughnuts. But Roth Gullo knew she had to say yes—even if it meant she was in for a hectic year.

"If I hadn't signed the lease on the doughnut shop a month before I knew about this deal, then we probably wouldn't have done Blackbird at this point. We would've just focused on Banyan," Roth Gullo says. "But fortunately, it actually is working out."

The biggest piece of the puzzle, she says, was hiring Tang, whose Chinese small plates had wowed her at his 25-seat Inman Square eatery. They started talking about teaming up a couple of years ago, with Tang eager to cook for a larger audience. When Banyan Bar + Refuge opens in July, his menu will be split into five sections: raw bar and other cold dishes, salads and vegetables, small bites, grilled items and large-format platters. That range of fare, from crudos to a platter full of fried chicken, is what's really exciting for Tang.

"People can kind of eat in different ways. If you want to come in and share some small plates and have some raw bar, that's fine. Or if you want to go throw down and have something larger, that's also an option," Tang says. "We're opening the doors to more influences than just Chinese. There's Southeast Asia, South Asia."

The Asian influence reaches the beverage program as well, with sake playing a starring role alongside craft cocktails and microbrews. Customers are more likely to sample sake, says COO Seth Yaffe, now that it's more widely available in smaller formats, as opposed to imposing larger bottles that cost $50 or more. "The single-serving unit is a really fun way to start experimenting and feeling like you can start really learning a lot more about sake by drinking it," Yaffe says.

Some of that drinking will be done at the bar, which is twice the size of that of Hamersley's, taking up nearly half the wall along the Clarendon Street side of the space. Although the space has been largely gutted—capacity will expand to an estimated 150 inside and 50 on the front patio—Hamersley's trademark open kitchen remains in the same spot, only there's now room for a raw bar and a few counter seats for diners to watch the line. Sure to catch most customers' eyes are the 20-foot light fixtures made of branches to resemble a banyan tree hanging above the dining room. They're an apt symbol, as the Gallows Group is branching out with its third South End spot.

"We're becoming a larger family, bringing more people into it and getting to know new people," Roth Gullo says. "It drives me nuts, but I love it."

LIVIN' THE CREAM

Ice cream may be the original seasonal dish, but it's a year-round favorite for most of us in Massachusetts. Throughout Boston and Cambridge, there's a plethora of ice cream shops to keep everyone happy, whether your tastes run to khulfi from Rancatore's, ginger molasses from Christina's or, well, anything from Picco. Now, farther afield, a trio has introduced what they say is "the world's first big-batch liquid nitrogen ice cream shop" in the little central Mass. town of Hudson.

Open just a few weeks, New City Microcreamery already has "kitchen crews running night and day" to meet demand, according to Michael Kasseris, a business partner alongside fellow Babson alum Karim El-Gamal and Bentley grad Jason Kleinerman. Within the 5,000-square-foot facility's open kitchen, an enormous 60-quart mint green mixer churns up ice cream bases from scratch. Chilling the mixture with liquid nitrogen creates smaller ice crystals, resulting in a smoother texture. The ice cream incorporates milk and cream from Mapleline Farm in Hadley, as well as other local ingredients such as Taza chocolate, fresh fruits sourced from nearby farms and coffee from Counter Culture in Somerville.

Flavors range from standard chocolate, vanilla and coffee to Ritz cracker pie, fennel pistachio and hibiscus cabernet. In the "something for everyone" department, there's also dairy-free vegan avocado, vegan vanilla and a mint chocolate chip made with fresh mint and tinted with avocado puree. Currently, one of the most popular flavors is peanut butter brownie crumble. It's based on a peanut butter brownie served for dessert at the Rail Trail Flatbread Co., a restaurant across the street that's also owned by the three entrepreneurs. In the works is a creation that the proprietors hope may lure Tom Brady to New City. Kasseris says the Patriots star, while training, makes his own avocado bittersweet chocolate ice cream, and so Kasseris is working to develop "the secret Tom Brady" recipe. "It's full of bittersweet chocolate," he reports. "We're looking forward to launching it, maybe get Tom Brady to taste it."

He'll have to trek to Hudson to try it. Despite a number of requests, New City's ice creams aren't available at stores and restaurants—yet.

SWEET CREAMS: New City has a flavor to suit just about any taste.

There are treats for both music lovers and sneakerheads at Converse's new Lovejoy Wharf headquarters, home of Boston's first Rubber Tracks recording studio, which will double as a live music venue when it opens later this summer. But the flagship Converse store is already open, offering two ways to get a new kick out of the iconic Chuck Taylors. There's a customization room where you can design a shoe from scratch, down to the sole and fabric, plus a Blank Canvas InkBar, where a resident "maestro" can help you design graphics to be printed on new Chucks. CATCH HIM AT...	Adelson Galleries, which reps the former graffiti artist, who recently installed his mural The Whale on Traveler Street across from the new Ink Block apartments. You may also spy his old Caype and Haste tags on rooftops and near train tracks in town.	The Lawn on D, where Akram spins under his DJ ABD moniker on June 20, and the Middle East Downstairs, where Bad Rabbits perform on June 27. Stay tuned for a few new singles from the local funk-rock favorites later this summer.
THE PROCESS	Andree altered a photo of a graffiti-covered 1977 New York subway train, playing with the contrast and adding his Haste tag and other drawings. "I always liked the look of those white trains. I made this for myself a while ago, and like 99.9 percent of my art, I had no use for it till now."	Akram added the Bad Rabbits logo to a pattern that has a lot of meaning for the band. "It's our interpretation of a Coogi pattern. It's in line with our summer merchandise theme, which has a lot of patterns that are inspired by the iconic Coogi brand that the Notorious B.I.G. sang about."
MAESTRO SAYS...	"Tyson tapped into his roots in graffiti to create a Chuck Taylor that truly reflects his artistic passions."	"Salim unleashed the creative spirit of the Bad Rabbits—this is their sound personified in a Chuck."

TRAVEL TIPS

To "Happy to now have a parking spot": I can totally empathize with your anger at the T riders who had seats, as I've been in that situation. But here's something that happened recently: I was standing on a crowded subway car where there was an elderly woman standing and looking tired. I felt angry and frustrated as the seated riders stared at their devices. But then a young woman standing near us called out loudly, "Will no one give this woman their seat?" Immediately a number of people stood to give the woman a place to sit. I vowed to myself to speak up the next time this happens and I'm there. We can all learn a lesson about speaking out in situations where some wrong is happening in order to find the good in people.

Dear D Line DJs: Everyone is entitled to listen to whatever drivel they wish, but when you blast your misogynistic, women-bashing, profanity-laced, just plain NASTY music during rush hour on a T that is filled with women and children, you've crossed the line. My husband was equally offended. And to the man-children encouraging him with a thumbs-up: Your mothers must be so proud. Use your earplugs.
— Sounding Off

Dear Mass. motorists: On Monday, May 18, I was forced to pull over on Melcher Street in South Boston. I had two flat tires, called AAA and waited 4-plus hours for a tow truck. On two separate occasions, two gentlemen stopped with the intention of helping me. Neither could do anything, but these two gentlemen exemplify all the qualities that are sorely lacking in the motorists who chose to assume that I was one of them—a self-centered Masshole who parked there just because I felt like it. May life bestow on you the fate you have earned. And to the gentlemen who cared enough to help me, my best to both of you!

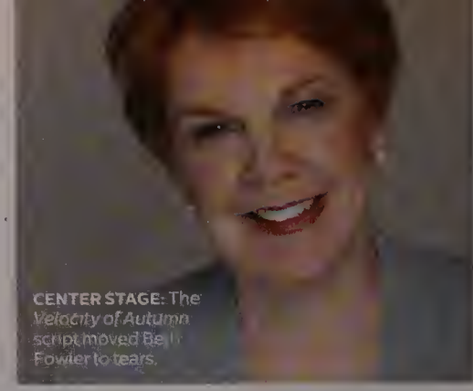
INSIDE TRACK



Tracksmith is off to a running start in its first year. The Wellesley-based brand debuted last July with men's shirts, shorts and singlets, and now it's adding styles for female runners. "It's one of the few sports that has about a 50/50 gender split," says CEO Matt Taylor, "so we always had planned on having a women's collection." The color palette mirrors the men's—no pink here—though the team took extra time to figure out necklines, armholes and overall fit. Next month, Taylor says they'll add sports bras and tights, but for now check out the Massachusetts-made Grayboy tank. It uses Tracksmith's signature Varsity Cotton blend, which Taylor made with Canton's 159-year-old Draper Knitting after foraging eBay and friends' closets for tees and inspiration. Grab a limited edition with "Track" hand lettering, a nod to the memorable 1967 Boston Marathon moment when race director John "Jock" Semple nearly tackled trailblazer Kathrine Switzer. / Soroh Hagmon

MAKING WAVES

Boston-based designer Graciela Rivas launches her third collection, the summer-inspired Waves, this month through online retailer Nineteenth Amendment, debuting a line of dresses that are actually made up of separates. "You can combine our tops and bottoms in different stylish ways. Buying two dresses is like getting four," says Rivas (far right). "You might wear a look we did not envision during the creative process." Show off your own sartorial skills at the line's launch party on June 25 at the W Boston. / Meghan Kavanaugh

CENTER STAGE: The Velocity of Autumn script moved Beth Fowler to tears.

Q&A

FIRED UP

After Orange Is the New Black's third season premiere, Beth Fowler returns to the Cape Playhouse in Dennis June 16-27 for the first two-hander of her long career. The Velocity of Autumn follows a 79-year-old woman whose children insist she move into a nursing home, driving her to mix Molotov cocktails and barricade herself in her home, until her estranged son's visit turns the tables. / Soroh Hagmon

YOUR O*ITNB* CHARACTER SISTER INGALLS WAS IMPRISONED FOR PROTESTING NUCLEAR FACILITIES; NOW AS ALEXANDRA YOU'RE THREATENING TO BLOW UP YOUR BROWNSTONE. A LITTLE DIFFERENT. A bit, a bit. [Laughs] I never actually examined that parallel before. Both situations are so un-Beth-like. They just are. One of the reasons that I left teaching and went into the theater was that the teachers were threatening to go on strike. And I said, "Oh, I couldn't do that. I couldn't leave the classroom and have children not going to school. I'll go into theater, and when all the dust settles, I'll go back." I was always a scaredy cat.

WHEN YOU READ THE SCRIPT, WHAT MADE YOU WANT TO TAKE IT ON? I closed my iPad and I burst into tears. I have never, ever responded to a play like that. And it's written like real people would talk, so I could hear the voices in my head, the conversation.

WHAT MESSAGE DO YOU HOPE AUDIENCES TAKE AWAY? It will remind everybody that there is a human being in there that's still probably 35 years old under all of this, the same person they were when they were playing tennis and could hop in the car and go someplace exotic. This gal traveled the world by herself when she was single. She's a professional artist, a parent, and now her children are treating her like an elderly person, but a little more than she cares to recognize. She's becoming frail, but the more they treat her as a frail person, she feels, the more frail she becomes.

YOU AND ONE OTHER PERSON ONSTAGE FOR 90 MINUTES. DOES THAT MAKE YOU NERVOUS? I'm more than very used to having people stare at me, and I don't think it makes any difference. I started my career in my grandmother's living room. I had a big Irish family, and my uncle played piano; we'd all sing, and that was my first audience.

BEARING FRUIT

Sauvignon blanc is on fire. Pedigree or brand no longer matters as much to most people as the grape's ability to deliver a thrilling blast of citrus. You can find stellar examples of this ultimate seafood complement from many different regions of the world, each of which reflects signature terroir differences. The best, even at moderate prices, share a gutsy, mouthwatering intensity. Here are four recent blind-tasting winners. / Sandy Block

PETER YEALANDS SAUVIGNON BLANC, MARLBOROUGH, 2014
Hailing from the place where sauvignon mania got started, this Kiwi beauty features a green apple, grapefruit and piercing herb-like flavor. Ripe and floral, but not over the line with tropical flavors (a direction too many of its brethren have taken), this sleek beauty goes perfectly with a goat cheese salad.
$13, The Wine Emporium, Boston

DOMAINE FOURNIER SAUVIGNON, VIN DE PAYS DE LOIRE, 2013
$13, Beacon Hill Wine

NEIL ELLIS SINCERELY SAUVIGNON BLANC, WESTERN CAPE, 2014
South Africa's wines are coming on, especially with racy sauvignons that are bone dry and pack a flavor punch. Neil Ellis is one of the area's budding stars, and this bottle is a dream come true with raw oysters or clams. Tart, minerally, clean and vibrant, this is everything sauvignon blanc aspires to be at an entry-level price.
$12, Blanchards Wines & Spirits, Boston

ST. MICHAEL-EPPAN LAHN SAUVIGNON, ALTO ADIGE, 2014
$17, Bauer Wine & Spirits, Boston

BUN HEADS: These pan-fried delights are stuffed with chives and noodles.

Good Eats: Pick Pockets

They're often compared to empanadas, hand pies and even Hot Pockets, but pan-fried chive buns have their own distinctive appeal. These northern Chinese snacks, which are one of the few items that distinguish the new Dumpling Palace in Symphony from its Chinatown sibling, Dumpling Cafe, are tender but sturdy dough pockets teeming with chopped cellophane noodles, egg and green chives. Pan-fried until they're deep brown with a crackly crisp, they're best when dunked in the accompanying dipping sauce, and they make a great sidekick to the kitchen's requisite soup dumplings. / Elizabeth Bomze

CRAZY LIKE A FOX

A LOCAL AUTHOR OF CRIME FICTION TURNS TO HORROR, WITH THRILLING RESULTS.

A Head Full of Ghosts* by Paul Tremblay
Published by William Morrow, 304 pages, $26

IN THIS MIND-BENDING BOOK, REALITY HAS as many layers as a piece of phyllo pastry. An interview forces 23-year-old Merry to look back at her experiences as an 8-year-old. Back then, her 14-year-old sister, Marjorie, seemed to be showing signs of either schizophrenia or demonic possession. Or maybe she was just eerily wise to unwelcome truths in her family and cleverly using her disturbing outbursts to call attention to them. In any case, doctors didn't seem to have any answers, so their religious father turned to a local priest. Father Wanderly thought an exorcism was in order—but he also invited a reality show to film the family drama.

At times Marjorie's craziness seems like a well-crafted fiction, and there are moments when she seems pretty normal, which is equally unnerving. But then she'll share a convincing vision of weeds and roots strangling the world, or tell Merry that she's going to yank out her tongue and wear it as a necklace. And how to explain the moving furniture Marjorie seems to have manipulated? Her chatty blog mocking the TV coverage adds another dimension, prompting the question "What's real?" all the more. And the suspense builds until Tremblay, a master puppeteer of truth and lies, much like Marjorie, takes us to yet another unexpected place of horror.

Marjorie said, "But later when he invokes the name of a saint you're supposed to say 'pray for us' after each one. Merry, if you don't do this correctly, you're going to get a demon inside you, one that has pointy scales and sharp horns, and then you'll be in hell, like me." ◆

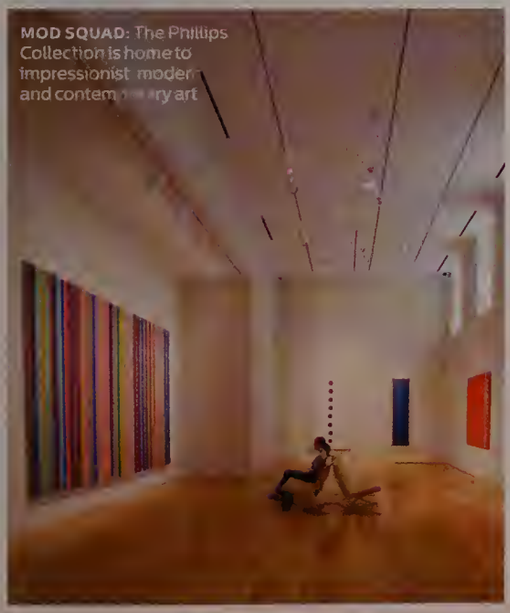
WASHINGTON, D.C., OFFERS MUCH MORE THAN A WALK THROUGH HISTORY.

If you're from the Northeast, you've probably experienced a scholastic weekend trip to the nation's capital, chock full of visits to monuments, brown-bag lunches, less-than-invigorating history lessons and late-night slumber parties in a budget hotel room. If you haven't been back since, now is the time to revisit D.C.—this time, as an adult who can take advantage of the many cultural movements happening in the land of politicians and cherry blossoms. By all means, partake in the obligatory White House visit, take a snapshot on Honest Abe's lap and relive that adorable scene from Forrest Gump in the Lincoln Monument reflection pool—but then go enjoy the District's other treasures. And with new takes on craft cocktails, a stellar culinary scene and an art space gaining international attention, Dupont Circle makes a great home base for exploring them.

One such treasure is the Embassy Row Hotel, situated on, wait for it... Embassy Row in Dupont Circle. Surrounded by edifices housing international dignitaries, the 231-room hotel recently underwent a $15 million renovation that left its exterior ugly—damn historical preservation rules—and its interior and chic roof-top pool stunning. The makeover came courtesy of JN+A architects and interior design firm HVS Design, who reimagined the property using contemporary interiors and bright pops of color with the occasional nod to the '70s, the decade the hotel opened. Many of the finishing touches pay homage to the District, from a majestic metal sculpture of cherry blossoms to a silhouette wall behind the front desk representing leaders such as Jefferson, Roosevelt and JFK. Iconic local architecture appears on guest room art and accent pillows, and the ambient soundtrack even taps artists with local ties. All in all, the hotel offers a delicate balance of old and new, classic and modern, and, like most things in D.C., Northern sensibility and Southern charm—making it a hotspot for tourists and locals alike.



After you've settled into your vacation abode, make your way to downstairs to Station Kitchen & Cocktails for one of the signature bottled cocktails or a stiff drink featuring ingredients like chai caramel candy, chamomile lemongrass syrup and Meyer lemon charcoal. They're all made onsite under the direction of hunky ex-football player Robert Yealu, director of restaurants at the property. Must-try concoctions include Burlesque & Rye, made with rye, brandy, Campari and a house shrub, and the Violet Beauregard, with vodka, dark chocolate, apple and, naturally, blueberry. The food is not to be missed either—nosh on small-plated delights like Korean caveman pops (Asian-spiced chicken drumsticks), meatball Wellington and, for dessert, bacon lollipops. Read: If you're on a diet, don't be.

Get your art buzz on around the corner at the Phillips Collection, the country's first modern art museum. Founded by wealthy art collector and critic Duncan Phillips in 1921, it's small in size but boasts works of art by Renoir, Bonnard, O'Keeffe, van Gogh and Monet along with seismic special exhibits such as the recent Man Ray show Human Equations: A Journey from Mathematics to Shakespeare.

Once the creative side of your brain has been properly primed, you'll be ready to explore one of the world's leading underground architectural projects. Dupont Underground is the brainchild of architect Julian Hunt, who felt the defunct oculiform public transit station was wasted space that could be better used for art galleries, events, stores and more. He and his managing director, Braulio Agnese, hope to revitalize the abandoned trolley station beneath Dupont Circle as a space for "presenting, producing and promoting cutting-edge arts, architecture, design and creative endeavors," a vision that's been described as the below-street-level version of the Manhattan High Line. It's not open to the public yet, but the hotel's marketing department is working on guided tours that will allow small groups to experience the project's progression. It's a lesson in history-in-the-making that you won't soon forget. ◆

THE BACKROOM AT MOODY'S
468 Moody St., Waltham
moodyswaltham.com/the-backroom

THE IMPROPER WAS AN ORIGINAL RABID fan of Moody's Delicatessen & Provisions in Waltham, giving it a glowing review and a Boston's Best award last year. Those laurels rested on the strength of its extraordinary housemade charcuterie, salumi and sausages, and the brilliant sandwiches built from them. Lately, we cheered to see its wholesale arm, New England Charcuterie, getting its products into area gourmet grocers like Formaggio. When Moody's opened a table-service restaurant called the Backroom in an adjacent storefront, we lined up there, too, wondering if chef/co-owner Joshua Smith could wow us with techniques beyond smoking, curing and pickling. In that, he has admirably succeeded, though he brought Moody's occasionally eye-popping prices with him.

A 16-seat bar dominates the 50-seat room, serving delicious originals like the Accommodation ($12), which evokes old-school Tiki flavors with rum, the sweet-spiced Caribbean cordial Falernum, lime juice and grapefruit bitters. Guests are greeted with a complimentary dish of housemade "Bugles" (like a conical corn chip) and a few slices of salami. That should whet your appetite for one of the best reasons to visit the Backroom, the charcuterie plate ($15 for three choices), which features generous portions of housemade cold cuts and pâtés along with sweet-tart pickled peppers, olives, mustards and toasted baguette. We chose the spreadable sausages 'nduja and sobrasada as well as thin-sliced coppa. In a town with a hundred self-styled charcuteriers, these outstanding products are showing up on many fine-dining menus for good reason.

Smith loves cooking with fire and has installed one of the prettiest open-kitchen fixtures in town, a domed, copper-clad wood oven. His "never the same" meatballs ($14) spend some time in it, coming to the table in a vivid tomato sauce sprinkled with fresh parsley, shaved parmesan and crumbly Romano. They are phenomenal: big and richly fatty, with nicely crisped exteriors. The oven also produces wonderful thin-crust pizzas like croque-madame flatbread ($15), which boasts many slices of the little-seen jamon qui, squiggles of creamy Dijon and a poached egg in the middle. It has a beautiful, bubbly, barely charred crust, but that smoky-salty ham is the star. A deep-flavored ragù adorns black-pepper spaghetti in bacon and egg bolognese ($16); another creamy poached egg turns this into a novel mashup of bolognese and carbonara.

The Moody's wedge salad ($14) presents another interesting hybrid, taking components of the classic wedge, making useful substitutions (baby gem for iceberg, a thick slab of lightly cured pork belly for skinny bacon) and deconstructing it like a Cobb salad. A salad of butter lettuce ($12) with sliced shallots, tomato confit and copious fine herbs is likewise big and pretty, dressed with just enough milkily emulsified vinaigrette. Caramelized onion soup ($14) features the essential quality beef broth and a thick crouton coated with stretchy Emmentaler. Well-browned pan-seared local sea scallops ($18) nestle in lemon brown butter with crisp adornments of fennel, snap peas and shaved asparagus and long radishes. Entrees include a lovely array of thick slices of smoked Wagyu brisket ($36), which boasts terrific smoke flavor and tenderness, though scant little survives of the fine-grained marbling that makes this cut worth the premium.

Desserts include a cake-like chocolate terrine ($11) enrobed in ganache and flanked with excellent peanut brittle and salted caramel ice cream. A delightful, faintly banana-flavored panna cotta ($11) is nicely complemented by peanut butter crumble and chocolate sauce, like a more elegant presentation of an ice cream truck novelty.

The Backroom styles itself as a serious wine bar, with a globe-trotting list and by-the-glass options kept fresh with a costly nitrogen wine-preservation system. It's easy to love by-the-glass options like a 2013 Pibaleau Touraine L'heritage d'Aziaum ($14/glass, $56/bottle), a Loire malbec redolent of stone fruits and chalk, or the 2011 Réveille "Climax" Côtes du Roussillon ($13/glass, $52/bottle), with its almost pruney spiciness, but a check with local retailers makes the markups feel a bit stiff for Waltham. The gentlest multipliers are on the 10-deep list of trophy wines (most $450-$600/bottle). We splurged on a glass of 1998 Chateau Margaux premier grand cru classé ($100/glass, $500/bottle) for a transporting few mouthfuls: so complex, subtle and velvety, and a bargain considering it retails for $450 a bottle when you can find it. Alas, most of us can't afford to drink like hedge-fund managers.

The room feels like a sunny, airy barn that has been carefully refinished and comfortably furnished, from the wide bar seats to the cozy banquettes, with hams and salamis hanging from the dark beams and a bathroom with a heavy door like a butcher shop's walk-in cooler. Service is relaxed and attentive, adding to the casual, convivial feel. Much like the deli, the dining room serves food that is unequivocally delicious in its straightforward fashion, at prices that occasionally strain credulity for the neighborhood. If you skate around the menu's priciest elements, say, by sticking to that singular charcuterie plate and rounding it out with a salad and flatbread or pasta, the Backroom looks a lot more like an awesome little neighborhood place and less like the rarified one-percenter joint its wine list can suggest. Order that way and be happy. ◆

Q: WHAT AGE IS RIGHT TO START BOTOX TREATMENTS?

A: There is no hard and fast rule other than at whatever adult age you need it. Some people, especially if they are prone to frown lines, start in their twenties with a dose that helps to prevent them from developing deep frown lines in the future.

At the other end of the spectrum, people in their 90s may ask for Botox because they do not feel old and want to look younger! However, on average, we see people coming in for their first treatment in their mid-to-late 30s.

Typically, the first area people want treated is "the 11s" between the eyebrows. The crease we make when we squint or frown gets deeper with age as our muscle memory kicks in. (Remember your mother telling you to stop frowning or that frown would get frozen on your face?)

As we continue to age, forehead lines come next and eventually crows feet at the edge of our eyes. All of these areas are successfully treated with Botox to relax the muscles creating the lines, which results in a younger, more rested appearance.

SHADES OF BLUE

PIXAR COLORFULLY ANIMATES THE GRAY MATTERS OF ADOLESCENCE.

Riley Anderson (voiced by Kaitlyn Dias), the 11-year-old girl at the center of Pixar's 15th animated marvel, sits between her mom and dad (Diane Lane and Kyle MacLachlan) at a dinner table, silently picking at Chinese takeout. The Andersons have just uprooted, moving from rural Minnesota to San Francisco, where their cramped new house in the city is creaky, old and gray, a far cry from the home they left behind. But then, Inside Out isn't the typical sunny kids fare. As if to announce this, Riley finds a dead mouse on the floor not far from where they're sitting.

The introductory moments of this third feature film from writer/director Pete Docter—who helmed Monsters, Inc. before winning an Oscar for Up—efficiently present the first decade of Riley's idyllic childhood from a uniquely creative perspective: inside her head. Or more specifically, a control room known as Headquarters.

Staffed by a crew representing five of her emotions, Riley's mind offers a colorful counterpoint to her drab new surroundings. Picture the '60s-era bridge of Star Trek's USS Enterprise, complete with a retro-futuristic control panel of analog knobs, switches and lights. However, rather than a group of human (and Vulcan) explorers, the characters peering at the view-screen displaying the universe (as seen through Riley's eyes) are made of pure energy—glowing bubbles of color-coded electrons, clustered together to form the sparkling forms of the film's heroes.

Joy (a chipper Amy Poehler, headlining a tremendous cast), the leader of the group and our journey's narrator, is a yellow-hued pixie—wingless, but not too far removed from Tinker Bell. Joy has been the dominant emotion guiding Riley, but now that the young tomboy faces depressing circumstances—living somewhere unfamiliar, starting at a new school with no friends and, worst of all, leaving her beloved hockey team behind—Sadness (Phyllis Smith), teardrop-shaped and appropriately blue, is becoming a more prominent presence. Rounding out the emotions are Anger (Lewis Black), who resembles a red fire brick, complete with flaming hair; Fear (Bill Hader), purple and coiled like a raw nerve; and the green Disgust (Mindy Kaling), who resembles a piece of broccoli.

Inside Out isn't the typical sunny kids fare. As if to announce this, Riley finds a dead mouse.

Sure, the setup may sound vaguely uninspired to viewers old enough to remember the early '90s Fox sitcom Herman's Head or a segment in Woody Allen's non-family-friendly film from 1972, *Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Sex * But Were Afraid to Ask*. However, the initial idea was inspired by Disney's 1943 short Reason and Emotion, and Docter's script (co-written with Meg LeFauve and Josh Cooley) goes deeper than any of these dared. If you take children younger than Riley to see this PG-rated picture, be aware that during the trippy exploration of a young girl's fracturing psyche, they may be exposed to raw emotional crises they've not yet considered.

Occasionally, as in the sequence at the dinner table, Docter and co-director Ronaldo Del Carmen shift the film's point of view outside of Riley's head and into the "real" world, observing how she is behaving externally and providing the viewer with a dose of relatable mundanity before snapping back into her head—or occasionally even into the minds of her parents.

As the bespectacled Mom notices her daughter's growing detachment during dinner, we zoom into her mind's maternal Headquarters, where her emotions (all women, each wearing glasses) go on alert. Meanwhile, in Dad's head, we see that his emotions (all male, each sporting his mustache) are distracted by a hockey game. Suddenly, as his emotions notice the concerned look on his wife's face, they incorrectly assess the situation, and tensions flare between father and daughter. We cut to a sighing Mom, whose emotions hilariously reminisce about the dashing helicopter pilot she could have married. Yes, this is one of the better Pixar efforts that offers as much (if not more) for adults as it does for kids.

While Riley was throwing her dinnertime tantrum, internally, the ascendant Sadness was wreaking havoc with some of Riley's joyful Core Memories. Just as Joy is struggling to understand why Sadness is taking a larger role in Riley's emotional development, the two are accidentally ejected from Headquarters and sucked through a tube that deposits them deep in Longterm Memory, leaving Anger, Fear and Disgust to man the controls of Riley's spiraling psyche.

Anchoring the emotions is another beautiful score by Michael Giacchino (an Oscar winner for his music in Up), who keeps Joy and Sadness moving as they learn to cooperate during their desperate journey back to Headquarters. The duo navigate Riley's crumbling Islands of Personality, taking a shortcut through Imagination Land before boarding the Train of Thought, all at the risk of being transformed into Abstract Junk.

And just when you think the film is over, be sure to remain seated during the end credits, where a montage functions as the perfect pick-me-up after the tearfully heady adventure. Docter, one of Pixar's founding members (who are appropriately known within as the company's "Brain Trust"), makes his diagnosis clear: Sometimes, it takes a touch of sadness to experience and appreciate real joy. ◆

STRANGE MELODY

CALIFORNIA SONGSMITH CONJURES SOMBER PSYCH-FOLK FROM INSULAR SPACE.

Jessica Pratt casts a dreamy spell, unspooling folky, hypnotic songs that sound like they've floated in from another time and place. Part of it is the unusual timbre of her ethereal yet earthy voice, which makes Pratt seem both childlike and worldly beyond her 28 years. Part of it is her delicate fingerpicking on her nylon-string guitar.

But there's something else at play. The California songwriter crafted her second album, On Your Own Love Again, at home on a four-track recorder. And its gauzy, primitive ambiance stands in contrast to most contemporary records.

"I always recorded my own stuff, since I was a teenager at my house, but I wasn't really thinking about it as far as having an audience," Pratt says. "I would play and sing into one microphone through a little guitar amplifier with reverb and then record it onto tape. It was purely out of necessity, but I also liked the way it sounded, so I think that set the framework for future recording."

She actually recorded her self-titled debut in a studio at age 19. It came out five years later, in 2012, when White Fence psych-rocker Tim Presley founded Birth Records to release the album. "It was very validating," she says. "It empowered me."

However, Pratt says she's more satisfied with On Your Own Love Again, recorded over two years, first in San Francisco and then in her new home in Los Angeles. "[I was] completely by myself and making everything just the way I wanted."

The move capped a difficult time in Pratt's life. Shortly before the release of her debut, her mother died and a seven-year relationship ended. Holed up in her new digs, Pratt found herself in an isolated space. "Physically and mentally—I'd just moved to LA, and I didn't have a ton of friends," she says from Chinatown. "It was a semi-intentional way to be totally alone all the time and work on stuff."

Pratt was used to separation from the outside world. "My mother was very anti-social, and we never really had people around when I was growing up," she says. But her mother was an avid music fan, introducing her daughter to bands like Brian Jonestown Massacre. Pratt liked T. Rex, the Rolling Stones and Marianne Faithfull (notably her junkie-period album Rich Kid Blues) as well as British and American folk. And she was drawn to the nylon-string guitar. "I wrote little poem things that made sense to me, to embrace that dreamy music," Pratt says. "I listened to Skip Spence and Syd Barrett at the time, and I wanted to write songs like that."

"It's kind of like therapy. When you hear yourself say something out loud, you gain a new perspective."

She dedicated On Your Own Love Again to her mother, and the losses in Pratt's life appear to be reflected in its shadowy songs of unrequited love, bridging the autobiographical and the abstract. "It's a common thing for people to look back on things they've made and say, 'I have zero idea of how that happened,'" Pratt says. "Even if you're a fairly analytical or self-assured person in your emotional temperament, things of that magnitude you are not able to fully process."

Pratt recorded by herself, then added overdubs that included two keyboard parts by Will Canzoneri. He also mixed the record, keeping the car alarm that crept into "Strange Melody" and a slowed-down patch in "Jacquelyn in the Background," made when fusing separate takes. "I don't think it's that startling in comparison to what other people do, like manipulate things through effects," Pratt says.

She'll be accompanied by guitarist Cyrus Gengras when she plays Great Scott on June 23 and North Adams' Solid Sound fest on June 27. "My isolationist self would knee-jerk, saying I would never want to tour because I'd rather be making music at home, but I think touring is a useful tool," Pratt says. "It's kind of like therapy. When you hear yourself say something out loud, you gain a new perspective."

Just don't expect her to initiate eye contact or chat up the audience. "I find personally that it sort of takes me out of the zone," Pratt says. "If you want the music to be good, you don't want me to ask about the weather." ◆

FRIENDS IN HIGH PLACES

AIR TRAVEL IS FRAUGHT WITH ANXIETY—MOSTLY OVER BEING FORCED TO CHAT WITH STRANGERS.

I AM NOT A CHATTY TRAVELER. FROM THE MOMENT I set foot in an airport to the moment I emerge on the other side of my trip, I'm in a fugue of mild discontent, a trance in which I half-consciously execute the rote routines of air travel without really paying attention to my surroundings. On any given flight, I'm 15 percent in the moment and 85 percent engaged in a lucid daydream about surfcasting with my best friend, Tom Brady. I always request an aisle seat just so I won't have to endure the encounter where you ask a stranger if you can go to the bathroom. What if they say no? I can't allow a sweatpants-wearer to have that kind of power over me.

And yet, I travel so much that odds dictate that I'm going to meet a few extroverts who won't take a monosyllabic grunt for an answer. I encountered one such lady at O'Hare a couple months back.

Here's what I know about her: She was an older woman, an investment banker, on her way to Shreveport via Dallas. After this trip she'd take a vacation with her family, using some of her 1.2 million frequent flyer miles to go to Belize. It looked like she might miss her connection because of the delay, but it was hard to tell because her FlightAware app was all jacked up. She could always rent a car and drive. She'd done it before.

Here's what she knew about me: I'm a good listener and willing to watch a stranger's luggage. Well, not really, but she didn't leave me much choice. She just stood up and announced, "I'm getting a sandwich. Could you watch my stuff, young man?" I was about to say that this is exactly what you're never supposed to do, but she was already gone. Was this some kind of TSA sting operation? I mean, who calls their phone "jacked up" and in the next breath addresses a 37-year-old as "young man"? It's possible that she was an undercover agent and this was some kind of Martin Lawrence Big Momma situation. I still don't know.

On another trip, I ended up talking to a British guy. His name was easy to remember, because it was Guy. (It's pretty handy when your actual name is a mnemonic device.) Guy was an auctioneer. He informed me that British auctioneers speak slowly. "It helps if people can understand what you're saying, doesn't it?" Guy said, slowly.

Well, what's the fun in that? In America, our auctioneers say, "Hey bidda bidda Buddha Buddha whogonnabuyit buyit buyit youstupididiot SOLD! To the man with the bolo tie!" Live auctions in America are based on confusion, panic and subterfuge, and mostly involve farm animals. Otherwise, people use eBay. Guy was amazed that I'm such an expert on auctions.

Occasionally (by which I mean once a decade) someone will recognize me in an airport. That happened a few weeks ago with a really nice guy named Curtis. Once Curtis introduced himself, I felt immense pressure to live up to whatever he was expecting, to wipe the resting bitch face off my mug and hold court, regale the man with feisty yarns.

Should I buy him a coffee? Offer to carry his bag? Give him a kidney? I wanted Curtis to go home and tell his friends, "I met Ezra Dyer, and he could not have been nicer. Funnier than Louis C.K., more gracious than Pope Francis, and he watched my luggage even though you're not supposed to do that. Highlight of my year, if not my life."

On any given flight, I'm 15 percent in the moment and 85 percent engaged in a lucid daydream...

That's not what Curtis said. I just hope he didn't think I was a dick. He probably wasn't aware of this, but I have a carefully choreographed preflight routine that I abandoned because I didn't want to be all Mr. Important Who Goes to the Airport Bathroom Five Minutes Before Boarding in Hopes of Avoiding the John on the Plane During the Flight. [See: "non-aisle seats, problems thereof."] We were chatting, so I didn't want to suddenly say, "OK, dude, good talk! I gotta go drain the iguana." Which is how I typically excuse myself.

The conversation ended awkwardly anyway, because I'd managed to snag an upgrade and Curtis was in coach. So when they called for first class to board, I looked at my ticket with a note of surprise, as if to say "What? There must be some mistake. I am a man of the people! How can I converse with my new friend if I'm eating warm cashews while he's relegated to a nightmarish dystopia of Knee Defenders and tray-table boogers?"

I bid Curtis farewell and headed down the ramp to get going on those cashews. I didn't feel bad for him, though. I am honest with myself when it comes to my attitude and deportment on airplanes. And not sitting next to me is the best upgrade of all. ◆

SELFIE LOATHING

SOUND ADVICE ON PUBLIC PICS, PARENTAL FEUDING AND GUILTY PLEASURES.

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book, No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults, hit shelves this month. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

The few times I've been moved to take a selfie in a public place, I can practically feel the judgment radiating off of everyone who sees. Do I shake off the haters or save my selfies for private places only? If it's all about you, why would you care who seems to disapprove as you gaze around you? And, I suspect, a lot of selfies in crowds are done to tell the world, "Look where I am and you're not." If you take the snapshots only when you're by yourself, with no one around, people might think you're lonely and needy. And we wouldn't want anyone to think that about us, would we?

Keep snapping away and hope that there are people out there who want to share in all your moments. We all want to be wanted.

My parents have been divorced for almost 15 years and have a relatively good relationship. (Read: They can hang out in the same room, chat and even share a laugh every so often.) But there are occasional moments when, say, my dad will be talking to me and make a snarky comment about my mom. Or my mom will tell me to ask my dad about something, rather than just asking him herself. It made me feel uncomfortable when I was a teenager, and now it's just annoying. I don't even know if they realize they're doing it, but it needs to stop. How do I get them to cease and desist without shooting the messenger? Your situation is completely normal in modern America. At least your parents make a pass at being civil to one another. But every sighting they have of each other reminds them of failure, and the blame game creeps in. It's just human nature, and it could be a lot worse. I think that my own parents eventually had a mutual dislike of each other. But they muddled through, mostly because there was so little divorce in that so-called greatest generation. There was too much societal disapproval of divorce then. I didn't have one friend in either grammar school or my large high school whose parents were divorced. Only in college did I meet contemporaries from divorced households. During and after college, my mother used to complain to me about my dad in every phone conversation. "Don't tell me," I'd say. "I can't do anything about it. Tell him. How do you think this makes me feel?" All of this made me concentrate on the future, not on the past, about which you and I can do nothing. And family, which I've written about a lot, can suck the oxygen out of your room like almost nothing else.

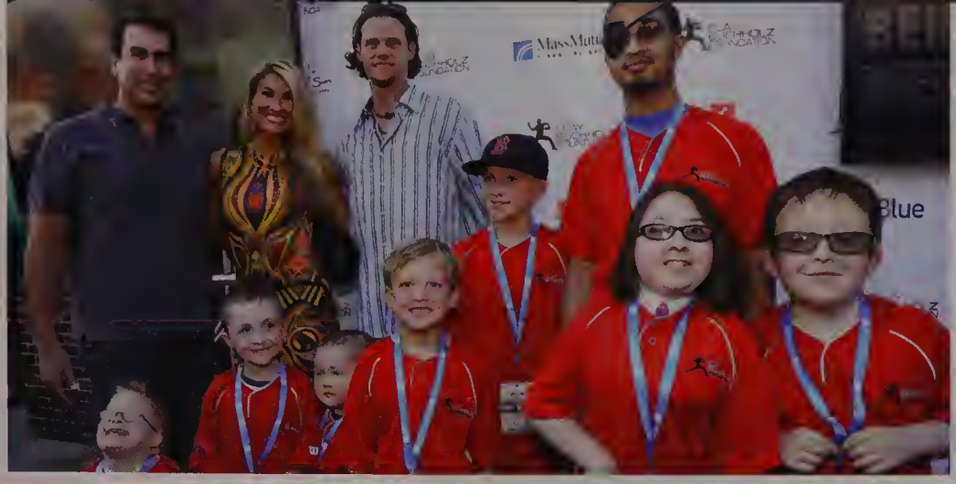
Your parents won't shoot the messenger. It's your adult life now, and you're trying to free yourself from the past. Don't enable them. Pour your feelings out. Meet the problem head-on and look to your own future. You'll feel relief, and your parents won't feel any worse than they already do.

I have a group of friends whom I rarely see because we are spread across the country. I love them and never want to grow apart, but with each of our busy schedules it's hard to stay in touch, even with our group text and Skype efforts. How can we stay close despite the distance? It's admirable of you to try to keep up with friends far away. And as you get older, they will mean more and more to you as all your lives become more complicated. Skyping or FaceTime will prove awkward eventually—too contrived and tough to coordinate schedules. Long-distance romances are hard, if not impossible, to sustain, and the same can be true about friendships: Life gets in the way of good intentions.

Some folks love to watch train wrecks...or train wrecks of people who seem to come from different planets.

So, I'd concentrate on a few things that might keep your network alive and well. Number one: See if you can plan a reconnecting trip with as many of these friends as can be assembled. Bear in mind that one friend has to be the point person in making the arrangements and coordinating the details. All of this can be a friendship breaker. But an annual escape to neutral territory can renew friendships and keep them fresh.

The second thing you can do to keep friendships rolling is to be a little original. Periodically send your far-flung buddies colorful postcards—funny ones or ones recalling past adventures or scenes of mutual interest. They will tend to put them on refrigerators or bulletin boards, and keep you on their minds.



I am obsessed with a reality show, although I don't agree with the family's extremely conservative views. Is it wrong to watch their show anyway—am I just supporting their hateful actions? Come on. Guilty pleasures are guilty pleasures. Often, while doing mindless workouts on the treadmill, we can get hooked on Real Housewives of New York City or Duck Dynasty or Jersey Shore. Do I condone or applaud their behavior or actions? Mmmm, well, what do you think? But it's fascinating to watch how other people live, or pretend to live. Some folks love to watch train wrecks...or train wrecks of people who seem to come from different planets than ours.

We've all got real things to keep us feeling guilty enough. Don't worry about you what you watch. I'll never tell. ◆

Soroff On / Katie Nolan

GAME CHANGER

THE TV HOST RIFFS ON OVERPAID ATHLETES, HER POTTY MOUTH AND CRUSHING ON ROB RYAN.

FRAMINGHAM NATIVE KATIE NOLAN, 28, IS THE host of Garbage Time with Katie Nolan, a comedy/sports show that airs Sundays at 9:30 pm on Fox Sports 1. As a child, she competed in rhythmic gymnastics, eventually becoming a Junior Olympic gold medalist. She studied public relations at Hofstra University and went on to work for Guyism.com, where she hosted, wrote and produced the Guyism Speed Round, a digital series about current events. She joined Fox Sports 1 as the digital correspondent and co-host of Crowd Goes Wild, and she also hosted her own FoxSports.com digital show, No Filter, covering daily sports topics with her distinctive brand of humor. A die-hard Bruins, Patriots, Red Sox and Celtics fan, she currently lives in New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Describe Garbage Time in a single sentence.
KATIE NOLAN: It is a weird, funny, awkward journey through the week in sports.

But you mix in some non-sports stuff, too. We do. It depends. If I or someone on the show sees a story that really speaks to us, we'll sneak it in. We have a tendency to use a lot of monkey news. I don't know why or even where we get it, but if it makes us laugh, we'll use it.

How much of the show do you personally write? And do you have final say on what goes in the show? There's a team of four people who do everything. We have a Google doc where we'll throw every headline we see, and everyone will write jokes for every headline. Then I pick my favorites.

So where do you keep your Junior Olympic gold medals? They were in a shoebox in my parents' attic, but currently they're on the set, I think. We used them as a prop. I should probably look into that.

Favorite Fenway snack? Fenway Frank, of course. And I like ketchup on my hot dogs. I'm so sorry. Don't judge.

What would you do if someone dared you to drink a glass of the hot dog water? How much money do I get?

You get to sleep with Channing Tatum. Oh, God, no. Absolutely not. He's so not my type. I'd do it for $500.

Would you ever date a pro athlete? No. It's a little mixing business with pleasure. I'm pretty sure I'm with the guy I'll be with forever, and that's not a hard no, but I don't want to be that girl. I don't really see the appeal. Athletes are on the road all the time. Plus, I want to be able to like sports, and if I dated an athlete, it would ruin it for me.

Is the pay scale for pro athletes absurd? Yes, but at the same time, we tune in to watch them every week. They deserve to be paid a lot. They generate a lot of money. The one thing that bothers me is the difference between sports. It's kind of ridiculous what a soccer player gets paid as opposed to basketball. And the one that's really ridiculous is baseball. There's no reason somebody should sign a contract that will take them into their 40s, worth hundreds of millions of dollars. That's absurd.

How often do you get bleeped on your show? Very. I have a potty mouth. It's a nervous tic almost. Some people say "Umm..." Some people say "Like." I say "Fuck."

Any desire to do stand-up? I tried. I took a stand-up class at ImprovBoston. I got really nervous. You really have to put yourself out there. Everybody's looking at you. I think someday I'll try it again. The thing that sucks is that now I have a little bit of a presence. If you're totally unknown, you can screw up and nobody cares. Not that I'm superfamous, but if I did stand-up, people would be like, "Oh, it's Katie Nolan from Fox Sports." And everything lives forever on the Internet now. The Internet has killed stand-up comedy.

Your studio audience sounds like it's three people. Actually, there's zero audience. We have a camera guy, who only likes soccer, and two producers, and this girl Vanessa who runs our teleprompter.

So that's who's laughing? Yes, and what's funny is they've heard the joke four or five times, or they wrote the joke themselves. So it's a very interesting dynamic in our little shoebox studio.

"Athletes are on the road all the time. Plus, I want to be able to like sports, and if I dated an athlete, it would ruin it for me."

Have you ever embarrassed your parents? No, and I'm shocked! My dad's a very proud dad, and he shares everything I do with everyone he comes into contact with. There was this one video I did forever ago about Halloween costumes, and I said something very lewd. The costume was a sexy hamburger, which I can't even believe exists, and I said something like, "This costume says you want to be eaten shamefully in the back of a car at 2 am," and my dad shared it with everybody. I was mortified.

Dream guest for Garbage Time? Rob Ryan. I have a huge crush on him.

If you could only watch one team for the rest of your life, which would it be? Somebody asked me this recently, and it's very difficult. It would be between the Patriots and the Bruins, and I'm gonna have to say the Bruins.

Who would you star in a lesbian sex tape with: Jenny Dell or Heidi Watney? Jenny Dell. I like brunettes.

Very important question: Does Julian Edelman have the nicest ass in the world? Yes. It's very simple. He has a nice smile, too. But his butt is so perky. Not that I've looked.

Stupidest organized sport? What's the one in the Olympics that's like power-walking? Race walking. Both feet have to be on the ground at the same time, or something? You're not allowed to run. It's like a marathon for very determined walkers.

Sport that should be an Olympic event but isn't? Climbing the stairs in a fifth floor Manhattan walk-up apartment. That should be one, and I would take home at least a silver. ◆

POOL HOPPING

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

A deep dive into six of Boston's coolest watering holes

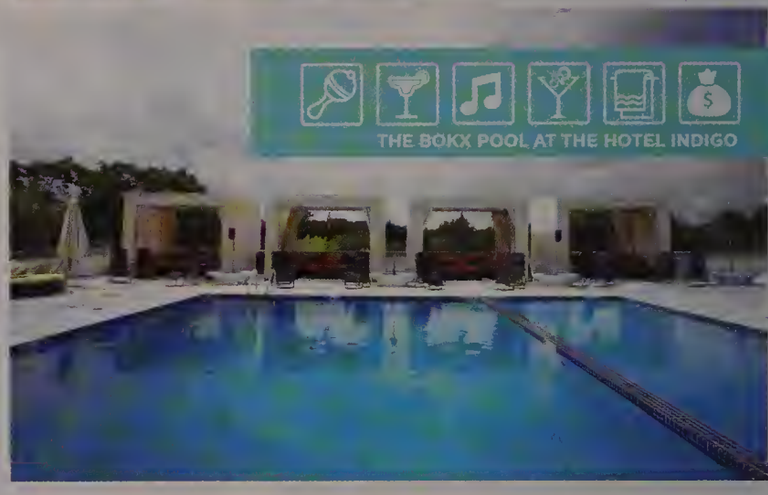
IF David Hockney lived in downtown Boston, he might still be a struggling artist, so rare is the sight of his most famous subject, the swimming pool. In a city where the weather is (ahem) uncooperative for much of the year, a pool is something of an extravagance, which explains the paucity of places to go for a dip when the mercury starts edging toward the sweltering. Some people will settle for a kiddie pool on the back deck, of course, and there are a few municipal pools, like the North End's harborside Mirabella, a steal at $15 for a season pass (but, alas, not open till June 20, too late for our deadline). And for decades, the cluster of apartment buildings on the corner of Comm. and Mass. Ave. known collectively as Charles White has hosted a storied summerlong party for its residents and their guests in the alley behind Newbury Street. Plenty of other private buildings—from Lewis Wharf on the waterfront and the Macallen in Southie to bazillion dollar townhouses on Beacon Hill—boast pools as an amenity. Still, the type of urban oasis where you can order a bite to eat, toast to summer and possibly ogle some eye candy is harder to find. But not impossible: We chose to take a lap at six such scenes and report back. So come on in—the water's fine.

DIVE IN

Looking for eye candy? Want to imbibe poolside? Here's a handy key that shows what to expect at each spot

THE CLUBS AT CHARLES RIVER PARK

If you lived here you'd be home now, and if it were July, you might also be parked outside on a chaise lounge. Despite being located in the middle of Boston's original high-rise development, the pool complex is owned and operated by Mass General, so it's a good place to meet a nice doctor or triathlete. Four 25-yard lap lanes separate two free-swim areas—one family-friendly, one adults-only—and there are coaching and master classes available. (A separate wading pool for the little 'uns is blessedly located at a remove.) A pop-up from Back Bay juice bar Jugos serves smoothies and healthy fare with a Latin flair—think grilled corn, guac-topped turkey burgers and paleta popsicles. And although there's no bar, alcohol can be brought in (and mixed with the aforementioned smoothies). There are 79 seasonal cabanas for rent, as well as one for daily use that has a grill, a refrigerator, lounge chairs, tables and showers, but there are also full locker rooms in the health club on the lower level. Day passes cost $40, seasonal membership is $490, and they offer a yoga class on the deck every Wednesday at 6:45 a.m. and outdoor Zumba once a month. The downside: the occasional siren of an ambulance or rotor wash from a med-flight headed to MGH.



10 WHITTIER PLACE, BOSTON (617-726-2900) CLUBSATCRP.COM

RTP AT THE COLONNADE HOTEL

The closest you'll come to South Beach in Boston, this rooftop pool is the preferred haunt of a moneyed international crowd whose bathing suits (designer bikinis that can't get wet, Vilebrequin trunks) and accessories (Goyard totes and Prada backpacks) sit atop plush white towels emblazoned with RTP, alongside sweating bottles of rosé in ice buckets. The blender at the bar is always going, while speakers pump in appropriately hip music and two TVs offer something other than tanned flesh to look at. Cover ranges from $20 to $40 (check the website for hours), and the party lasts until 10 pm on Fridays and Saturdays and, especially, on Monday industry nights. For ballers, there are cabanas ($200 on weekdays, $325 on weekends) with a $100 food minimum, but that's rarely a problem with a menu that boasts specialty cocktails, decent Champagne, wine and beer lists, and a full menu that includes salads, mezze platters, swordfish tacos, lamb kabobs and Regina Pizzeria pizza. And Brasserie JO, located in the hotel lobby, will send up steaks and oysters for cabana occupants. Author and yoga instructor Rebecca Pacheco leads a $15 class at 7 am on Wednesdays, and changing rooms with showers make it easy when it comes time to bounce. The downside: The pool is very small, more appropriate for dunking than swimming.

120 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON (617-425-3408)

ROOFTOP@REVERE

With an expansive feel (16,000 square feet), this outdoor retreat on the Revere Hotel's seventh floor offers dramatic city views in a park-like setting, thanks to lush landscaping by Winston Flowers. The extensive menu includes light bites and plates perfect for sharing, while the cocktail, Champagne, wine and beer lists are better than most clubs. The staff is outfitted in clothing by local designer Bless Mazarura, and the 21-plus age limit guarantees an afternoon or evening free from shrill children (or even shriller parents). General admission is $20 on weekdays, $30 on weekends, and there are four- and eight-person cabanas available ($150 and $300 on weekdays, $225 and $450 on weekends, with food and beverage minimums). There are plenty of hotel guests working on their tans, but you're just as likely to see a pair of models sipping Champagne or well-dressed professionals enjoying an al fresco lunch. Sunday brings a daytime Sun&Set party, Monday features an industry night, and Athleta hosts free Pilates workouts on Tuesday evenings. The downside: The actual pool is under glass, and the bathrooms double as changing rooms.

THE VERB HOTEL

Built mid-century and revamped under new ownership last year, this Fenway hotel has a decidedly Palm Springs-cum-Vegas feel. The music theme is immediately apparent, with rock 'n' roll memorabilia from the collection of local legend David Bieber in the lobby, and carries on outside, where the refrigeration units are reminiscent of Marshall amps. The pool, located in a courtyard, is surrounded by the guest rooms' brightly colored grid of Mondrian-esque windows. A visitors' policy has yet to be finalized, but there's certain to be demand, especially with O Ya proprietors Tim and Nancy Cushman opening Hojoko, an izakaya, or Japanese tavern, serving ideal fare for warm weather. The emphasis on music—in homage to the neighborhood's history as a nightlife destination and onetime home to rock stations WBCN and WFNX—extends to programming by alternative music website and streaming radio station Vanyaland, not to mention the oversight of marketing director Lauren Recchia, the drummer for punk-dance band Petty Morals. Live performances have already included artists like Swedish pop sensation Tove Lo, who performed a gig for Kiss 108. It might be premature to say, but we're guessing this will be the place for extravagantly pierced, highly tattooed hipsters to hang out. The downside: The pool deck is limited and hemmed in by the hotel.

1271 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON (617-566-4500) THEVERBHOTEL.COM

THE BOKX POOL AT THE HOTEL INDIGO

A slightly more grown-up version of the Colonnade or Revere, this boutique hotel in Newton attracts singles and families from both Boston and the western suburbs. Like its downtown counterparts, it has a full bar offering everything from cocktails to bottle service and an outdoor menu featuring lighter fare, plus the high-end steakhouse BOKX 109 just inside the door (although you'll need to cover up). Conveniently located next to the Riverside T station (the last stop on the D Line), it boasts a country-club-gone-Vegas vibe, accessible with a $25 day pass. There are cabanas ($150 plus food and beverage minimums), as well as fire-pits with seating options for 30 to 200 people, making it an ideal place to host a summertime blowout. Every Sunday is a themed party where they bust out floaties and tubes to make it easier to sip Champagne while kibitzing in the saltwater pool. The music goes from loungy to thumping as day turns into night, and any time, it's a happy hunting ground for suburban divorcees. Bring your fashion A-game, too, to avoid having shade thrown your way from over a pair of Tom Ford sunglasses. The downside: When you're ready to leave and hit the town, you're all the way out in Newton.

An outdoor pool seems to be the It amenity for Boston's current boom of luxury residential developments, and Ink Block is no exception. The swimming pool at this newly opened rental and condo complex, set on the former site of Boston Herald headquarters, is currently open only to residents and their guests, but the surrounding area is open to the public for special events. Indeed, the ethos behind the entire development is to create a sense of community in this newly enlivened corner of the South End. The expansive garden surrounding the pool, with a lush lawn and spacious areas for entertaining, hosts exercise classes, grilling demonstrations by local chefs and activities such as a cornhole league, movie nights and wine tastings that are open to anyone. Alcohol is allowed on the premises and stocked at the enormous new Whole Foods downstairs (connected directly by elevator), and restaurants that are due to open in the building will offer delivery. The pool can be converted into a stage for live music and other performances, and there are outdoor showers and restroom facilities. The downside: Bring your own towel.

Summer Sounds

Making noise in Harvard Square.

ONE DAY, MULTIPLE stages and artists, zero dollars. That all adds up to Make Music Harvard Square, the annual free music festival that takes place each summer as part of Fête de la Musique, a movement that started as a street festival in Paris and has since taken root in cities across the globe. Now in its eighth year, Cambridge's sprawling fest offers a good excuse to get outside and soak up some sun and some free music—from bluegrass to blues, country to jazz, rock to pop and beyond. With a bill that boasts local favorites like loungy glam rockers Parlour Bells and alt-Americana act the Rationales, summer is already sounding pretty good. | Alexandra Cavallo

ALL IN THE FAMILY It takes a certain kind of man to rear a family of child prodigies—or at least a certain kind of actor to play that man. Gene Hackman took on that challenge, starring in Wes Anderson's 2001 film The Royal Tenenbaums in a role written specifically for him: an estranged patriarch who fakes a terminal illness to reconnect with his misanthropic genius offspring, including a tracksuit-loving Ben Stiller, a bloody mary-swilling Luke Wilson and a steely, chain-smoking Gwyneth Paltrow. Treat your own dad to a Father's Day flick on June 21 when the dramedy hits the screen at the Brattle Theatre. / Molly Jane Thoms

Avengers: Age of Ultron ★★ Writer/director Joss Whedon's sequel to his 2012 blockbuster, The Avengers, opens with a well-choreographed sequence highlighting the superhero team's effectiveness. Unfortunately, this isn't matched by the choppy, quick-cut CGI destruction that follows once Tony Stark—the man inside Iron Man—accidentally creates the Avengers' robotic nemesis, Ultron (voiced by a deliciously arch James Spader), who takes on a bit of his dad's ironic sensibilities, quipping so much that his menace is hampered. In fact, much of Whedon's patented banter falls flat, dampening the fun that was so present in the previous picture. Hawkeye, aka Clint Barton, who spent much of the first adventure as a mind-controlled zombie, becomes the most fully formed character, and Natasha Romanoff/Black Widow receives both backstory and an ill-advised romance with Bruce Banner—who transforms into the green-skinned Hulk when his blood pressure rises—while Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr.), Captain America (Chris Evans) and Thor (Chris Hemsworth) have less to do when hurling one-liners at one another. But it's Linda Cardellini, who appears as Barton's civilian wife, that gets perhaps the best line: "You know I totally support your Avenging." So do we. But for how long? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Clouds of Sils Maria ★★★1/2 You may not know his name, but know this: Olivier Assayas is one of our greatest living directors. The 60-year-old Frenchman continues to build upon an amazing filmography seen by few in the U.S. with his latest, a challenging drama about acting that comments on celebrity, gossip culture and young, overprivileged starlets. Talky to a fault, it features spectacular acting turns by Oscar winner Juliette Binoche as Maria Enders, an aging actress just past the peak of her international career, and Kristen Stewart as her personal assistant, Valentine. That's right, Twilight's mopey brunette is one of the film's many sly delights, offering a meta-commentary on her own persona in a production that recalls Bergman's chamber dramas, more specifically—and fittingly—Persona. Don't laugh: Stewart became the first American to ever win a Best Actress César (France's Oscar) with this performance, which builds upon her recent criminally unheralded work in Still Alice and the little-seen Camp X-Ray. But this is Binoche's show. As Maria's relationship with Valentine increasingly echoes that of the leads in the play she's rehearsing, Assayas comments no longer, allowing us to interpret his masterfully ambiguous ending. (At West Newton.)

Ex Machina ★★1/2 Many viewers of this science fiction thriller, the directing debut of Alex Garland, writer of Danny Boyle's 28 Days Later and Sunshine, will mispronounce the title of this movie, oblivious to its origins. This is probably for the best, since Garland's script isn't nearly as smart as he seems to think it is. Ostensibly, this is a film about the most advanced artificial intelligence ever created. Too bad writer/director Spike Jonze explored this concept far more effectively two years ago with his Oscar-winning script for Her, which featured a man falling in love with the operating system in his cellphone. That OS was voiced by an unseen Scarlett Johansson, while here, the AI is visibly embodied by Alicia Vikander as Ava. Caleb Smith (Domhnall Gleeson), a programmer at an Internet-search giant, has been brought to the private mountain estate of the company's brilliant CEO, billionaire recluse Nathan Bateman (Oscar Isaac), to evaluate Ava's human qualities, but is there more going on here? Sadly, yes, and the mystifying conclusion leaves you yearning for the halcyon days of murderous AI like 2001's HAL. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Far from the Madding Crowd ★★ Director Thomas Vinterberg has mounted a handsome adaptation of Thomas Hardy's mid-19th-century-set literary classic that's completely superfluous in the face of John Schlesinger's nearly three-hour 1967 version that's superior in every way. Although the Dane has filled his update with strong actors—Carey Mulligan as the self-willed Bathsheba Everdene and Matthias Schoenaerts, Michael Sheen and Tom Sturridge as her three wildly different suitors—they come across as children compared to the earlier cast, which featured British legends Julie Christie, Alan Bates, Peter Finch and Terence Stamp projecting far more palpable longing in the same roles, working from a script by Frederic Raphael that took its time establishing an air of violence that threatened to overtake the sweeping romance at any moment. Vinterberg's picture runs a hair under two hours with a script courtesy of David Nicholls (screenwriter of 2011's romantic drama One Day and author of the novel it's based on). The heat-lacking results play like CliffsNotes as composer Craig Armstrong's score lays the piano and violin strings on thick, overcompensating for the sexual chemistry that was presumably left on the cutting room floor, far from the screen. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Heaven Knows What ★★★★ If you spend time in coffee shops and other public spaces, you might notice a fringe population: the young and homeless, the addicts slouched over subway seats in heroin-induced hazes or using the restrooms at your local Starbucks to chase the dragons directly into their veins. It's a hell of a way to live (and die), but most people tend to look away from society's undesirables. Not Josh and Benny Safdie. The brothers, Boston University graduates known for their intimate portraits of idiosyncratic fellow New Yorkers, have turned their camera on Arielle Holmes, a recovering addict they chanced upon while planning for another film and encouraged to document her experiences. Holmes penned a soon-to-be-published memoir, Mad Love in New York City, which the Safdies used as the basis for this raw and unrelenting fusion of fiction and documentary. Holmes plays Harley, a version of herself whose mad love centers not just on smack, but on Ilya (Caleb Landry Jones, the only professional actor in the cast), the junkie without a past or future to whom this film is dedicated. (At Kendall Square.)

I'll See You in My Dreams ★★★ Blythe Danner shines in this comic drama directed by Brett Haley. She plays Carol, a retired schoolteacher and former singer in her 70s who's been widowed for 20 years. Her tranquil routine of playing cards with close friends (nice turns by Rhea Perlman, Mary Kay Place and June Squibb), tending to her garden and (especially) relaxing with a glass of wine is disrupted when her beloved dog dies. All alone in her spacious LA home, she finds loneliness creeping into that routine, until two new men enter her life: Lloyd (Martin Starr), the 30-something pool man who begins sharing that wine with her, and Bill, the gravelly-voiced old cowboy (played by Sam Elliott, naturally) who begins wooing Carol, who hasn't dated since her husband's death. The script, courtesy of Haley and Marc Basch, avoids veering into cliche, and Danner exhibits an easy rapport with the ensemble that belies the compressed shooting schedule on this charming independent production. Some tears are shed, but Danner's transcendent turn behind the mic at a karaoke bar keeps the movie singing. A nice, small-scale alternative to blockbuster fatigue. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Love & Mercy ★★★1/2 By all rights, Bill Pohlad's biographical film about the life of Brian Wilson shouldn't work. This unconventional portrait of the singer/songwriter and leader of the Beach Boys focuses on two eras in the troubled genius's life: the creative renaissance surrounding Pet Sounds and two decades later, when he emerged from a couple of years in bed, heavily medicated and under the 24/7 watch of dubious therapist Eugene "Gene" Landy, played by a fright-wigged Paul Giamatti. Within the film's tricky structure (terrifically edited by Dino Jonsäter), Gene stands as Brian's second abusive father figure; the physical abuse inflicted by his actual father (Bill Camp) left him mostly deaf in his right ear. And yet, Brian could still hear the music in his head. Alas, he also heard voices, which he confesses to his love, Melinda Ledbetter (Elizabeth Banks), during one of many quietly devastating scenes set in the '80s, where he's played by John Cusack, who doesn't remotely resemble the real Wilson, unlike Paul Dano, who portrays him during the '60s. Like I said, it shouldn't work. But like Wilson himself, the seemingly incompatible aspects come together—and they sing. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Mad Max: Fury Road ★★★1/2 Max Rockatansky returns, madder than ever, but more hardened. He's a changed man, played by Tom Hardy, filling the boots previously worn by Mel Gibson in filmmaker George Miller's first three Mad Max pictures. In hindsight, the climactic 14-minute chase sequence in 1982's The Road Warrior served as a test run for Mad Max: Fury Road, which the 70-year-old Miller has distilled into a single two-hour chase. This is pure cinema, and it shames the work of directors half Miller's age. When Max is captured by brutal warlord Immortan Joe (Hugh Keays-Byrne), he becomes a "blood bag" for Nux (Nicholas Hoult), a cancer-ridden "War Boy" who requires transfusions. Meanwhile, Imperator Furiosa (Charlize Theron), one of Joe's lieutenants, has secretly liberated his five wives in her War Rig. A small army of Joe's War Boys gives pursuit, and Max, chained to the front of Nux's hot rod, is along for the ride. Vehicular mayhem ensues and Max escapes, teaming up with Furiosa, his fate now bound to hers. As the armies of more warlords converge, the earlier films' battles for oil and gas are replaced by a fight for something more precious: human life. A masterpiece of motion. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect 2 ★★ Like another of this year's sequels, The Second Best Exotic Marigold Hotel, this encore to Pitch Perfect reunites characters from a beloved film based on a novel—and the results are just as out of tune. Without a strong foundation for her screenplay, returning writer Kay Cannon takes Mickey Rapkin's characters, the Barden Bellas—Beca (Anna Kendrick), Fat Amy (Rebel Wilson), Chloe (Brittany Snow), et al.—adds a legacy member (Hailee Steinfeld) and a Hispanic stereotype (Chrissie Fit) to their ranks, and then fails to give them anything new to do. Instead, she has the Bellas open the movie with a birthday performance for the president, then proceeds to humiliate them after a wardrobe malfunction exposes Fat Amy's vagina to the Obamas. Really. In order to restore their good name and standing before they all graduate, the a cappella group must win an international competition in Copenhagen. Elizabeth Banks and John Michael Higgins also return as a pair of racist, homophobic competition commentators, with Banks pulling double-duty in her directorial debut. Alas, the Pittsfield native can't quite keep this from becoming caca-pella. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Poltergeist ★1/2 Tobe Hooper and Steven Spielberg's 1982 horror classic Poltergeist expertly tapped into the zeitgeist of its time, capitalizing on the television's central place in the American family's home—and transforming TV's post-national anthem signoff static into an iconic source of dread in the process. More than 30 years later, cable and satellite broadcast hundreds of channels—but in an age of digital devices, it seems like no one is really watching anymore. So, it's apt that this remake from producer Sam Raimi (The Evil Dead) and director Gil Kenan (Monster House) still utilizes TV as a central gimmick, since few will care about this film when the superior original exists. The script by Boston playwright David Lindsay-Abaire eschews providing any normalcy as build-up to the strange goings-on; bizarre occurrences begin as soon as the Bowen family (not the Freelings) moves into a foreclosed home in a crummy Illinois neighborhood, despite the fact that dad Eric (Sam Rockwell) is unemployed and his credit cards don't work. And while young Kennedi Clements does reprise Heather O'Rourke's iconic "They're here!" line, her delivery's as lacking as the rest of this update. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Results ★★★ Danny (Kevin Corrigan) is a recently divorced, newly rich New Yorker who's transplanted himself to Austin, Texas. Alone in his mansion and out of shape with nothing to do, the "weirdo" visits local gym Power 4 Life. There, he informs the owner and self-styled guru Trevor (Guy Pearce) that his interests begin and end with "learning how to take a punch." He may need to by the end of this shaggy, incisive and not wholly predictable romantic comedy from former Bostonian and Austin transplant Andrew Bujalski. If you've seen any of his earlier films, from 2002's Funny Ha Ha to 2013's Computer Chess, then you probably realize that labeling this a "rom-com" is slightly disingenuous. Nevertheless, a triangle forms in this look at the relationship between money and happiness when intense and acerbic trainer Kat (Cobie Smulders) comes between the two men. This is the biggest-name cast Bujalski's assembled, but they fit comfortably into his peculiar rhythms, freeing them to do some deceptively sly and charming work. (At Kendall Square.)

Spy ★★★ There's been a welcome trend of women taking on roles typically associated with men this summer, and now we have a movie bluntly titled Spy to subvert James Bond-style genre tropes. It not only gives us a requisite precredit action sequence featuring a suave, globe-trotting agent played by Jude Law, but it also offers up Jason Statham in bulldoggish Daniel Craig mode as a second CIA spook. However, the script then contrives to blow one agent's cover and the other's brains from the back of his head, opening up an undercover opportunity for the film's true star, Melissa McCarthy. That's right: This is a comedy, one that once again pairs the force of nature with writer/director Paul Feig after their successful collaborations on Bridesmaids and Heat. Unlike those pictures, though, this is a one-woman show, giving McCarthy ample room to display her talents once she leaves behind her basement-dwelling desk-analyst role, donning a variety of personas and disguises as she infiltrates the ring of a deadly arms dealer played by Rose Byrne, her Bridesmaids co-star. And surprisingly, McCarthy's Susan Cooper kicks a lot of ass—when she's not tickling funny bones. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Tomorrowland ★★ If you've seen The Incredibles and Ratatouille, the computer-animated Pixar classics Brad Bird wrote and directed, you're aware that he's gifted. So, I hate to report that his new live-action film is a mixed-message mess. A science-fiction mystery adventure, it celebrates exceptional people like himself—but with the unexpected implication that those who are average have no place in tomorrow's world. Nevertheless, the Walt Disney production's visual marvels are apparent from the outset, when Bird whimsically replaces the Magic Kingdom in the Mouse House's animated logo with the titular retro-futuristic, utopian cityscape. George Clooney plays former boy genius and current middle-aged, reclusive grump Frank Walker, who's dragged into danger by peppy high-schooler Casey Newton (25-year-old Britt Robertson). Proclaiming that utopia can only be achieved through positive thinking, Frank posits that society has poisoned its well by celebrating and consuming dystopian entertainments. This, after Bird's film has violently dismembered and abused human-looking robots, vaporized three police officers and—in true Disney fashion—punished the token villain with death. Meanwhile, I'm positively thinking I'd rather be entertained by another viewing of the dystopian Mad Max: Fury Road than be lectured about why I shouldn't. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

EXCLUSIVE LISTING Our appraisal of Real Estate is rising—and we're not talking about the city's luxury high-rise boom. Childhood pals Martin Courtney, Matt Mondanile and Alex Bleeker got their start with jangly indie-rock idylls fit for barefoot beach days, but the clouds rolled in on the New Jersey natives' latest effort, Atlas, making for a more personal album that may be their best yet. Featuring a fuller sound thanks to drummer Jackson Pollis and keyboardist Matt Kallman, it explores guilt, growing older and sleepless nights to gorgeous effect, with dense guitar arrangements to match the maturing lyrics. Have all the feelings on June 24 when Real Estate moves into the Paradise Rock Club. / Amanda Saunders

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SPITTING IMAGES Push pins, kombucha tea and contact lenses are just a few of the unusual materials Anicka Yi incorporates into the multisensory works featured in 6,070,430K of Digital Spit, an exhibit on display at the MIT List Visual Arts Center. Exploring the ways different sensations shape memory and meaning, the Seoul-born conceptual artist blurs physical and artistic taste in odd, sometimes off-putting pieces like a synthetic pond filled with hair gel and bacteria, installed in a menthol-scented gallery set to an intermittent soundtrack. Get a whiff of the exhibit before its fades away on July 26—just don't forget the hand sanitizer. / Hannah Lander

COMFORT FOOD

Jessica Feehtor doesn't believe in keeping secrets—personal or culinary. In her first book, Stir: My Broken Brain and the Meals That Brought Me Home, the creator of popular food blog Sweet Amandine shares both, recounting very personal experiences alongside favorite recipes. Feehtor began writing Stir in 2012, four years after she experieneed a near-fatal brain aneurysm, and the memoir reeounts the role that cooking and baking played in her reeovery. "It's a love story," she writes—a love of family, friends and food. She'll give us a taste on June 30 when she heads to Harvard Book Store. / Charlie Gill

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is re-affirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mo-

saic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

JACK OF ALL TRADES

The Boston Pops pulled out all the stops to mark Keith Lockhart's 20th anniversary as maestro, and Opening Night was epic, with a cocktail reception and buffet dinner followed by a concert in Symphony Hall, which was decked out in red, white and blue.

Prominent among the throng: the velvet-voiced Ron Della Chiesa and his adoring other half, Joyce, arts booster Joyce Kulhawik and her partner in crime, Andrew Cohen, attorney at large David Jensen and his art expert wife, Diane, grande dame Estrellita Karsh, BSO head honcho Mark Volpe and the flawless Martha, Republican publican Tom Kershaw, and so on and so forth.

Bernadette Peters brought the house down with her performance, but the real surprise onstage was original Mouseketeer Cubby O'Brien, playing drums. A giant, elaborate cake was wheeled out in Lockhart's honor, and, as always, the concert ended with a balloon drop to the tune of "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

Meanwhile, both maestro and orchestra were wearing white before Memorial Day, prompting one guest to say, "Who knew Keith was both a conductor and the Good Humor Man?"

K-9 FASHION UNIT

The possibility of anyone not being wowed by the Perkins Possibilities Gala was pretty much nil, given the fact that a well-lubricated cocktail hour gave way to a sumptuous dinner and over-the-top entertainment under a big top on the school's gorgeous campus.

Present and accounted for: Friends producer Kevin Bright, gorgeous board chair Corinne Grousbeck, philanthraposaurus rex Teddy Cutler, basketball great Walter McCarty, the devilishly handsome Sam Shaw, Beacon Hill beauty Allison O'Neil, supermodel-in-hiding Jadine Greenaway, the unsinkable Evelyn Tracey and her dashing husband, Michael, brunette do-gooder Rachel Kaprielian, real estate mack daddy Steve Karp and the beautiful Jill, brunette bombshell Jordan Salvatoriello and one person who was introduced by his female friend as "the man who lives in my guest house...and my sex slave."

Ambassador of Soul (and Perkins grad) Ellis Hall performed—though he was upstaged by the wildly talented students—and the action on the dance floor felt like a magnitude 8 earthquake.

The evening's most amusing, if un-PC, comment: "That guide dog must be gay. He started barking the second he saw that woman's dress."

TREE HUGGERS

What's green and white and black-tie all over? The Green and White Ball, a benefit for the Friends of the Public Garden, held at the Taj Boston.

The swanky dinner-dance attracted the likes of momshell Maggie Moran and her super suave husband, Bill, blond beauty Julia Owens, shoe designer Thom Solo, the stunning Lori Sidman, gorgeous lunachick Kate Lubin, brunette babe Jojo Longnecker and her main man, Jeff, artist extraordinaire Claudia De Piante Vicin and one man wearing an impressive-looking award on his tux, which turned out to be his American Legion Baseball championship medal from eighth grade.

The ballroom overlooking the Public Garden never looked lovelier, and beaucoup dinero was raised, but unquestionably the evening's highlight was watching the Moms Gone Wild on the dance floor.

As one attendee put it: "You know the babysitter's getting a major tip tonight."

MAKE IT WORK

Anna Wintour was nowhere in sight, but otherwise, MassArt's annual fashion show, Vision, was as major a production as anything New York Fashion Week has ever seen.

Held at the Castle at Park Plaza—transformed for the evening into an interstellar first-class departure lounge—the event raised money for scholarships. Front and center: the incomparably chic Karen Rotenberg and super stylish art dealer Pat Stavarides, budding fashionista Paris Noble and her gorgeous mother, Mahsa, the ever dapper David Webster, artistic visionary Sally Taylor, the naturally carbonated Doris Yaffe, Cambridge art collector Susan Paine, Chestnut Hillion Kasey Kaufman, the flawless Julie Hume Gordon and her smoldering other half, Phil, gorgeous redhead Daniela Winston and others too fabulous to mention.

The pre-party prepped everyone for the main event, which elicited the appropriate oohing and ahhing. Overheard by the bar: "I'm going to need another glass of wine if I'm going to look at a bunch of girls who are younger and prettier than me." ◆
